Shopping in New York Made Easy

Let the VOGUE Shopping Department Keep You Always in Touch With the Best Metropolitan Shops

IF you lived in Clarksville, Tennessee, you would be one of nine thousand inhabitants.

The nearest city, Nashville, would be forty miles distant as the crow flies—fifty miles by the railroad.

You would be almost twenty-four hours distant from New York, and the round trip—exclusive of hotel bills—would cost you at least fifty dollars.

You would find it both difficult and expensive to shop in New York, or even in Nashville, wouldn't you—if you lived in Clarksville, Tennessee?

But there is one reader of VOGUE in Clarksville who has solved the problem. Through the VOGUE Shopping Department she buys every article she needs as conveniently as if she were in New York herself. Her very latest remittance, significantly enough, is the largest she has sent us—a cheque for three hundred dollars. With it she writes:

"I have found shopping through VOGUE very satisfactory and appreciate your kindness in filling my orders."

HERE are just a few of the articles VOGUE has bought for this subscriber living in Clarksville, Tennessee:

Gowns,
Hats, Dress Materials,
Underwear, Gloves, Shoes,
Boy's Sweater, Boy's Underwear, Boy's Leggings, VOGUE PATTERNS,
Cuff and Collar Pins, Coral Chains,
Enamel Pins,
Blouses,
Laces,
Hair Brushes,
Birthday Gifts,
Miscellaneous Jewelry.

From March 30, 1911, to April 1, 1912, this patron of VOGUE's Shopping Department has sent us $1,050.00 to expend for her in New York. To have made the purchases herself would have meant at least three shopping trips to New York, at a total cost of not less than $225.00, which we have saved her, not to mention the immense amount of time, trouble and energy saved by sitting at home and letting VOGUE attend to the tiresome details of the shopping.

YOU are cordially invited to make use of the services of this department.

There is no extra charge for purchasing any article. We will secure for you the lowest price offered by the New York shops, and will see that deliveries are promptly made.

To facilitate quick and intelligent service, please observe the following rules:

1. Please write on one side of the paper only, and enclose stamped envelope for reply.
2. When ordering any article mentioned in VOGUE, please give the date of the issue in which it appeared and the number of the page.
3. Enclose cheque or money order to cover the cost of the desired articles. If cost is unknown, send the approximate amount. Should a balance remain after purchase, it will be promptly refunded.
4. In case your remittance is inadequate, a bill will be sent and articles cannot be delivered until payment is made in full.
5. All goods are sent express collect, except small articles that can be mailed. When ordering these articles please enclose approximate postage. The balance, if any remains, will be refunded.
6. Except by special arrangement, articles cannot be sent on approval.
7. Charge accounts will not be opened with the patrons of this Department. Any patron may send us a deposit, however, which will be expended by us as required, and can be withdrawn upon demand.
8. When ordering garments of any kind, be sure to state size, and to give us the fullest possible idea of your preferences in style, color, material, etc.

Shopping Suggestions for May

It is being satisfied with just half your possibilities for beauty. Style and beauty of line depend entirely upon proper corseting. The

Spirella

offers to every woman the opportunity to look her best and feel her best. This is insured by two things:

Spirella Service—Your corset is made to your order. It is fitted in your own home by our trained corsetiere. Her expert knowledge enables you to procure the proper model so adapted to your needs that it will correct any faulty conditions and give you perfect poise and beauty of line. She shows you how to adjust it and how to wear it to bring out your best possibilities for beauty.

The Spirella Stay—Spirella boning is flexible in every direction yet permanently retains its original shape. Ventilative and light in weight it is a delightful relief from the steeled constraint of the average corset.

Our Spirella Guarantee

The Spirella stay is guaranteed not to break nor rust. Nor will it take a permanent bend at the waist line. So long as the material in the corset holds—and only the best materials are used—the Spirella corset remains as perfect in shape as the day it was made. Should a stay break or rust within a year we will give you a new corset.

The Next VOGUE

YOU will like the next VOGUE—if for no other reason than its unusually cosmopolitan flavor.

Dated May Fifteenth, the next VOGUE will have much to say about fashions for the traveler. A great deal of smartness can be squeezed into the narrow confines of a steamer trunk—read the next VOGUE for full particulars. There will also be some advice on the selection of the trunk itself.

"Once aboard the lugger" you will want to know how to escape the usual inconveniences and unnecessary expenses of travel in Europe. Mrs. Blanche McManus has accordingly written for you an article on how to travel abroad with comfort and economy. This article is both entertaining and helpful, and we take particular pleasure in recommending it to you.

Into Ireland we have sent a correspondent, who finds inspiration a-plenty in the great estates of Kylemore and Muckcross, both of which are now in American hands. We have also an illustrated article on Portland, "The English Gibraltar," a spot that repays better acquaintance. There will also be a Holland article under the head of "Dutch Meccas for American Artists."

Early Summer fashion news, and the regular departments (including the new "Educational Guide," or school directory) will complete a number of really exceptional interest. Start your subscription with it—the coupon below saves the trouble of writing a letter.

W H E N A F R E N C H G I R L M A R R I E S

A FRENCH girl goes through many preliminary ceremonies before she becomes a bride. Immediately after the betrothal comes the ceremony of signing the contract, a purely business arrangement between the parties concerned, carried out in the office of the family lawyer. On the evening of that day or the next, the parents of the bride give a large reception to the members of the two families and the intimate friends of each. This reception is as elegant as possible, and on this occasion the young woman wears one of the prettiest gowns of her new wardrobe.

On the occasion of the civil marriage the bride wears a street costume as plain or as rich as inclination prompts; the crowning glory of her maiden days is the gown worn at the church wedding, which takes place at noon. When the marriage service before the altar is over, the wedding party, followed by the long cortège of invited guests, files into the vestry for the signing of the register. It is then that the most elegant of Parisian gowning is seen. Two by two, the guests move slowly down the aisle, and the onlookers who have been able to press into the back part of the church have an opportunity to see wonderful toilettes. After this comes the formal reception at the house, where the wedding gifts are displayed. The wedding gown shown on this page was presented to Vogue by the Maison Drécoll, and is, as such a gown should be, charming by reason of its simplicity. A sheath slip of soft, white charmeuse is covered with a tunic of fine Malines lace; shaped very short in front, it curves slightly upwards and, rippling into graceful folds on either side, deepens into a long, rounded train in back. White satin bands outline the square yoke, which frames a tulle guimpe gathered into a high collar. Short lace sleeves falling in soft folds from wide armholes drape the arms to the elbows and end in scant frills. A wreath of orange flowers binds the tulle veil close to the forehead, and the cordon of orange flowers which circles the waist is gathered into a cluster of the blossoms at one side; from here a slender shower drops to the hem of the tunic.

For the Many Ceremonies That Attend a French Wedding, an Unusually Large Trousseau is Required—Some Pretty French Wedding Customs

A French girl's "toilette de contrat" is scarcely less elaborate than the wedding gown itself; here the overdress is draped over a rope of roses

The beauty of this wedding gown lies in the tunic of Malines lace, which, short in front, ripples into a long, flowing train in back, and is trimmed with orange blossoms

A negligée made charming by the Alençon lace cape collar which continues in a tablier down the front, and a train caught under a great silken knot

For the civil service at the Mayor's office a recent bride wore this Directoire tailleur with its long tails and "sabot" sleeves

French ingenuity has supplied flat loops through which to slip the shoulder ribbons to obviate sewing in after each washing

AFTER WATTEAU

More elaborate is the wedding gown shown on this page. The long, pointed train hanging separate from the waist-line gives it exceptional grace, and its lace-trimmed tunic is bordered and draped with orange flowers. A large bunch of these bridal flowers lies, as though lightly dropped, on the end of the train. A band of soft, white silk oddly circles the shoulders. Its upper edge is trimmed with a narrow lace frill, kept in an upright position by a line of orange blossoms finished under a cluster of the blooms in front; a deep triangle of lace falls under this fichu drapery. The tunic, the corsage and the plaited sleeves, finishing at the elbows with soft lace frills, are of chiffon. The train and the short skirt are of creamy-white charmeuse.

LES DEMOISELLES D'HONNEUR

One of the prettiest things about a French wedding is the office of the "demoiselles d'honneur." Sometimes one, sometimes more young girls are chosen for this function. They pass through the crowd presenting to all a little "aumônière" in a silent appeal for alms for the poor. The prettiest girls are always selected for this charming duty. Each one is escorted and guided through the throng by a young man, who lightly holds her finger tips.

The little "aumônière" which the "demoiselle d'honneur" on this page holds in her hand is a dainty affair of filmy lace with tiny white roses hanging from streamers of white ribbon. She is gowned in shell-pink silk veiling made with a finely plaited skirt and a tunic of pink chiffon frilled with white lace. At one side the lace is stiffened and turned upward. The fichu corsage and plaited sleeves are trimmed with lace to match. The belt of dark red velvet is clasped with a bunch of matching roses, and red velvet faces the wide brim of the yellow Italian straw hat. Strings to match tie it lightly at one side; the tall spray of roses which trims it shades from deepest red almost to white at the tips.

LA TOILETTE DE CONTRAT

For the civil service at the Mayor's office, a recent bride wore the pretty street costume of blue and black changeable taffeta shown on page 18. A wide puffing of the same silk with a second collar of fine Malines turning widely over it, because it is softer to the face.

IN THE BOUDOIR

The little intimate things of a bride's wardrobe are always interesting. A lovely negligée designed for a bride's trousseau is of accordion-plaited mousseline de soie chiffon partly covered with rose liberty silk draped in black under a great knot. A big, square collar of old Alençon lace falls very low at the back, crosses the bust in fichu effect, and appears to continue down onto the skirt in a tablier of the same lace. This is shown on page 17.

The rest jacket shown on this page is particularly dainty. It is of pea-spotted, cream tulle trimmed with fine lace. The lace-frilled peplum is caught up on each side to the high, wrinkled belt by large ribbon bows. Short sleeves, shaped from wide, seamless armholes, are looped up on the outside of the arms under bows, and a deep frill of lace finishes the neck. The lace frilled cap is made of the same material as the jacket.

The practical and becoming fashion of wearing a lace cap during the early morning hours is now fully accepted. Quite different from the cap just described, yet as pretty and graceful, is the cap shown above. It is made of all-over Valenciennes lace and shaped like a "fool's cap." The top is drawn into a long point, which is finished with a silk tassel and falls over one shoulder. The edge, fitting the head closely, is frilled with lace.

THE BRIDAL SET OF LINGERIE

The set of undergarments shown on pages 18 and 19 comprises a combination garment of a petticoat and corset cover, a chemise, a nightgown and drawers, all composed of the finest handkerchief linen batiste, edged and flounced with fine Malines lace. This lace is this season used far more than any other in the decoration of gowns as well as underwear. The insertions are of old, embroidered linen enclosed in narrow lines of insertion in a manner that proves extremely ornamental. The fine tucks on the side portions of the combination garment tend to strengthen it where the most hard wear comes, and also provide fullness over the hips.

When chemises without shoulder straps were first offered by the designers of underwear, women who had no special maid strongly objected to the extra trouble of sewing on, after each washing, the ribbons that serve as straps. This objection has been removed; wide, flat loops embroidered in coarse cotton threads are supplied in the making, and through these the ribbon is slipped and tied to suit.

Lovely rest jacket and cap of pea-spotted, cream tulle trimmed with deep ruffles of lace trimmed the hem of the short, straight-hung skirt. The full skirt of the veritable Directoire coat was attached to the corsage by a large cord, over which the silk was shirred. It was knee deep on the sides, but hung in a long point in the middle of the back, and was trimmed at the hem with a full silk ruffle, shirred over a small cord with an inch-deep heading. A waistcoat of toile de Jouy turned over at the neck into a flat, pointed collar, leaving the throat exposed. Small buttons of cut crystal fastened this vest, and larger buttons to match trimmed one side of the corsage; false buttonholes figured on the opposite side. The "sabat" sleeves turned over on the inside of the arms in revers faced with toile de Jouy. Deep lace frills finished them. Among many new sleeves this one is a favorite. The collar also is well liked. It is, however, generally finished

THE SMARTEST WEDDING OF THE LONDON SEASON

The Trousseau of Lady Eileen Butler, Daughter of Lord and Lady Lanesborough, Who Early in April Became the Wife of the Marquis of Stafford

THE most interesting wedding of the season, that of the Marquis of Stafford, heir to the Duchy of Sutherland, to Lady Eileen Butler, daughter of Lord and Lady Lanesborough, took place in London on April 11th. When the heir to a great name, the finest mansion in London, the largest castle in Scotland and a lovely manor in the Midlands marries, society is naturally interested. Lord Stafford's future Marchioness has been the subject of much conjecture ever since the young Lord attained his majority.

But aside from these purely social considerations, the wedding had many interesting features. The bridegroom is what is known as a "good all-round fellow," popular wherever he goes, a great sportsman, a terror to hounds, a fine shot, a daring traveler. The charming girl he has chosen for his wife is one of the most popular beauties in England. One hears on all sides of her gentleness and kindness of heart. She is just the sportswoman mate for her husband, an expert on the ice and at all other sports she has taken up. His lordship is only twenty-three, and scarcely looks his years, while the Lady Eileen is just twenty. He is tall and very fair, with the pleasantest smile in the world and a most open, boyish expression, and she, in her wedding gown, more like a rose than any English bride I ever saw.

THE CEREMONY

The church was beautifully decorated. The bride was given away by her father, Lord Lanesborough. The bridegroom was attended by his brother, Lord Alistair Leveson-Gower. Quite unexpectedly, unless one is English, this name is pronounced Looson-Gore. The Duchess of Sutherland, mother of the groom, looked charming and scarcely older than her new daughter. Behind the couple, like a flight of bright butterflies, came the gay procession of fourteen bridesmaids—all of them young and smiling and very happy. All these facts are to be read in every newspaper, but the atmosphere of happy youth and gaiety which surrounded this marriage could only be known by experience.

The bridesmaids, including Lady Betty Butler, Lady Rosemary Leveson-Gower, Lady Mary Dawson, Lady Enid Fane, Lady Evelyn Herbert, Miss Lavinia Bingham, Miss K. Leigh, Miss Hilda Butler, Miss Phyllis Coombe and the Misses Combe, are all remarkably pretty girls.

Their gowns, made by Lucile, Limited, had an underdress of pale pink silk trimmed with ruffles of real Valenciennes lace, veiled with a petticoat of pink chiffon trimmed with Valenciennes lace insertion through which was run pale pink ribbon, and an overdress of rose-petal pink ninon bound in around the feet with a wide ruffled band of sky blue taffeta edged with lace ruffles. Coats of pale blue taffeta were edged with ruchings and decorated with four large buttons. They opened over waistcoats of white chiffon, and tucked into the belts were bouquets of shaded pink roses with dull green leaves. The head-dresses consisted of gold turbans with high aigrettes caught under tiny bouquets of satin flowers.

THE INFORMAL PART OF THE TROUSSEAU

Lady Stafford's trousseau is chiefly remarkable for its delicacy of coloring. The lingerie is especially beautiful; here are no elaborate embroideries nor over use of lace. One of the prettiest sets is made of a silk muslin of so pale a pink as to appear almost white. The nightgown is trimmed in front with fifty hand-run pin tucks, ending in a yoke and sleeves entirely composed of strips of fine Limerick lace showing the famous rose shadow design, and intersected with narrow bands of Cluny lace. The effect of barring the cobwebby lace with that of a heavier and richer texture is very lovely.

in bed. It is made of pale blue satin lined with blue crêpe, with the shoulders cut in kimono shape, and the underarm and side seams unsewed, but caught lightly together with knots of blue satin ribbon. It is completed with a deep Limerick collar reaching to the waist, cut in a square at the back and in a "V" in the front.

One of Lady Stafford's loveliest tea gowns was made with an underdress of pale pink satin, not much heavier than a Japanese silk. This is veiled with a tunic of pink chiffon, on the edge of which is sewed an eighteen-inch border of Mechlin lace of a wonderful tint of old ivory and with a design of maidenhair fern. Below the tunic another band of the Mechlin lace gives a three-tier skirt effect. The bodice is very short, and corsage and sleeves are bordered with narrow bands of rhinestones. This gown is veiled with a pink chiffon coat, cut in front into two long points. The whole coat is hemmed with a sparkling border of rhinestones, and on each point is hung a large tassel of paste and crystal beads. The only other decoration is large, beautifully cut paste buttons and a little bunch of faded bronze, magenta and plum-purple roses, with which the coat is caught to the bodice of the underdress on the left side.

FOR FORMAL WEAR

An evening gown is cut on lovely, simple lines. It is of absinthe-green brocade figured with great clusters of wild roses and their leaves in a dull, old-gold tint; sprays of lace of the same color form a part of this pattern. The bodice is a Magyar design in brocade, veiled by a bodice of shot absinthe and gold ninon, hemmed with absinthe-colored chiffon. The skirt drapes around from the front to the back, where it falls in a narrow, pointed train. Into the waist is tucked a giant rose of shot, old-gold and green velvet and gauze with deep green leaves.

Lady Stafford's trousseau includes a wonderful opera cloak. It is of shot gold and crème de menthe green charmeuse and is lined throughout with crème de menthe ninon. Running from neck to waist, where it meets an enormous medallion of tarnished gold lace mounted over crème de menthe satin, is a V-shaped panel of satin at the back of the cloak. A gold collar and cuffs complete the wrap, which is draped around the figure and fastened at the left side with ten large buttons.

The going-away gown is of deep blue charmeuse. The skirt is draped on the left side up to the hip, where it is held in position by a large satin button. The bodice is made with a very deep yoke of white chiffon, hand-embroidered with a design showing the little flowers slung on chains. The hat to be worn with this costume is black Tagal. It has the long line of the models of this season and is trimmed with long feathers, one in white and one black, intermingling.

Several of the blouses were made on one style. This model has an underlining of white chiffon, on which is sewed bands of white lace with a convolvulus design. This lace forms a square yoke and runs around the blouse. It is outlined with a pale blue satin ribbon tied in soft little bows in front. The whole is veiled with an overblouse of burnt-biscuit ninon, untrimmed except for a multitude of tiny, hand-sewed pin tucks placed close together, and collar and cuffs of real Valenciennes.

All the smart world of London was present at the wedding. The members of the Royal family who attended were the Duke and Duchess of Argyll, Prince Arthur of Connaught, and the Prince and Princess of Teck. Others present included the Duchess of Westminster, Lord and Lady Granard, Ambassador and Mrs. Whitelaw Reid.

INDIVIDUALITY IN ENGAGEMENT RINGS

The Growing Desire to Make This Most Intimate of Symbols an Expression of a Bond and a Sentiment is Gradually Robbing It of Its Conventional Uniformity

The jumelle ring is in two sections, which open by a secret clasp to disclose the sentiment inscribed within

The modern interpretation of the opal is that all its colors unite the virtues of all other stones

The motif of intertwining leaves and berries about the sapphire signifies mutual helpfulness and fruitfulness

Many of the conventional symbols are decoratively woven into this design—the diamond, the heart, arrows and Cupid himself

Two initials are woven in the diamond-set design which radiates from the solitaire

Initials interwoven in a tracery of gold lines on a background of tempered steel as in the swords of Damascus

Twin rings joined with a delicate lattice and set with the two birthstones

The moonstone of good fortune is flanked by sapphires of constancy; the long setting slips conveniently over the wedding ring

Over the arbor of culture runs the grape vine of pleasure, set with amethysts and diamonds, for sincerity and purity

Heart-shaped diamond bordered with calibre emeralds and sapphires

Set in platinum is a Navette diamond framed in small diamonds and emeralds

Emerald cut diamond flanked by calibre sapphires and diamonds set in platinum

ALTHOUGH few of us, perhaps, are as unconventional as Molly Makebelieve who wanted no engagement ring, but instead two wedding rings, one for her active right hand, to be inscribed inside, "His soul to keep," and one for her passive left, bearing the words, "To be a sweetness more to be desired than Spring," still many of us do long to express ourselves, unhampered by convention, in this so intimate symbol. And added to this personal desire for self-expression is the spirit of the day—the straining for novelty. Everyone is searching for something unique. Even the wedding ring, the epitome of conventionality, has not escaped this influence, and the engagement ring has succumbed entirely.

The diamond solitaire in its plain setting reigned supreme for many years. Those deeply versed in the lore of gems, their meanings and mystic virtues, tell us that the diamond "preserves peace and prevents storms." Perhaps that explains its long life.

But the matter of choosing the engagement ring is no longer so simple. Designers have now to make a thorough study of the history of rings in order to keep up with the demand for novelty. It is a fascinating study—a ring is such a personal thing that it seems to bear a mystic quality of suggestion that makes one desire to know its story.

THE ORIGIN OF THE WEDDING RING

The Egyptians first made use of the ring, not only as an ornament, but as a signet. A man's seal stood for his signature and became a symbol of authority. The Egyptian women, it is said, wore rings mostly on the third finger of the left hand. So here originated our fashion of wearing the engagement ring.

Symbolism marks the earliest uses of the ring. The endlessness of the circle suggests eternity, and hence the symbolism of the plain wedding ring. In Grecian families the ring was used as a sign of the bond between husband and wife. The women wore rings with the sole of a foot forming the head of the ring, showing that they had given themselves in subjection to their husbands. This little foot-note from history reveals a state of affairs in ancient Greece that would hardly win the approval of women of the twentieth century.

THE ROMAN BETROTHAL RING

But one of the ancient forms of the Roman betrothal ring suggests a design that should appeal to the girl of to-day. The birth-stone of the man is set in one ring and her own birth-stone in the other, and the two rings are joined together at the back as in the middle illustration. Another suggestion is to use two oval plates instead of the gems, with a monogram on each.

It is said that the idea of birth-stones had its origin in the ceremonial breastplates of the old Jewish priests; these were set with twelve gems, each representing a month of the year. The garnet is for January; for February, the amethyst; for March, the jasper; for April, sapphire; May, agate; June, emerald; July, sardonyx; August, carnelian; September, chrysolite; October, aquamarine; November, topaz, and the ruby for December.

Tradition attributes certain virtues to these stones. The agate is supposed to bring health, wealth and long life; the amethyst is expressive of sincerity and love. The clear beryl or aquamarine gives happiness and everlasting youth, and the carnelian prevents misfortune. The emerald stands for immortality. Power, grace and victory are won with garnets, and courage and wisdom with jasper. The pearl and the opal mean hope. The old idea of the ill-omened opal originated with the East Indians because of the wonderful changes of light and color in the jewels, and the mysterious fact that when certain people wore them, they lost their brilliancy and became dead. But there is an entirely natural reason for the change in luster. The composition of the stone being hydrous silica, the moisture is drawn out when a warm-blooded person wears them or when they are allowed to be too near heat. Rubies are for dignity, sapphires for constancy, and the topaz brings friendship and happiness.

HOW SOCIETY PLAYS AT MONTE CARLO

ONE often wearies of the too great gaiety of Monte Carlo—of the crowds at the Casino, of the tea concerts in the Salle de Musique, of the great, crowded tea rooms of the Hôtel de Paris, filled with the clamor of many tongues, the bray of music, the fresh scent of flowers mingling with the too sweet artificial perfumes and the odor of tea and toast. Here everyone comes to see everyone else, hoping to encounter someone celebrated for his or her deeds or misdeeds. It is not long before all this palls, and yet one wishes tea or aperitif at a certain hour of the day, so where to go to enjoy it more quietly? Well, there is the Métropole, the Hermitage or the Riviera Palace, where tea is served leisurely in charming rooms at small tables placed far apart to give guests a sense of privacy. It is a pleasant contrast to the noise and bustle of the popular tea rooms to sit sometimes, with only a favorite book for company, on the terrace of the Café de Paris in the beautiful Place de Casino. Here one may feel quite alone, though in the midst of men and women who, careless of carriages and motor cars, constantly pass and re-pass or seat themselves at little tables placed far into the roadway.

AFTERNOON AT THE PLACE DE CASINO

One is tempted to sit long over the afternoon teacup or tall glass. In this leisurely land all the hours seem movable at will, or stand still for lack of it. As the mellow twilight deepens into purple shadows, the outlines of the long, low, cream-colored façade of the Casino opposite, pierced with its lighted windows, are slowly blotted out. The doves, so tame that one must move with care to avoid stepping on them, flutter gently to their nests, under the eaves and in the niches of the cornices. The palm trees, motionless in the still air, stand out sharply with most decorative Eastern effect against the darkening sky; lights begin to twinkle on the distant hillsides; waiters move softly about, carrying away the forsaken tables and empty chairs, and suddenly one realizes the aperitif hour is over. With noiseless steps another day has fled, and the dinner hour, near at hand, will mark the beginning of the revelries of the night.

The splendid dining room of the Hermitage, with its wonderfully carved, brilliantly lighted ceiling supported on pillars of Carrara marble,

All Nationalities Have Combined to Make the Gay Little Principality of Monaco the Most Wonderful Playground in the World

is a charming frame for well-gowned women. On one of his "off" nights recently, Monsieur Chaliapine, the great Russian singer, the idol of his public, dined here. He was with a party of men, but at the nearest table, and sharing equally the glances thrown in that direction, sat a woman famous for her beauty, her charities and wealth. She was wearing a white satin gown sparkling with crystals thickly sewn. In the soft, shining white stuff that draped her figure closely she was as stately as a Greek statue. Her jewels were diamonds and rubies, and at one side of her corsage glowed a deep red rose. Red roses decorated her table.

A police dog scaling a fence preparatory to pursuing his victim

THE PRIVATE CIRCLE AT THE CASINO

Often I see this beauty in the Private Circle at the Casino, and when it closes, a little before midnight, she takes the underground passage to the baccara rooms of the Sporting Club, which remain open all night. She seems to care only for the excitement of placing her gold pieces on the tables—several hundred louis at a time—since she can gain only in a few combinations; when she wins, she appears distinctly bored, and no amount of losses disturbs her serenity. She is young, with a beautiful, rose-leaf complexion, but her hair is quite white, and this, with her beauty and superb gowning, attracts unusual attention. Her gowns are always perfectly suited to the occasion. She wears her corsages cut extremely low, but neck and throat are always covered with a strip of black tulle adjusted in a manner so purely personal that it is not easily copied. She was unusually lovely one afternoon at the restaurant of the Sporting Club. She wore a black silk, tailored costume and one of the new "pork-pie" turbans inspired by the Second Empire. It was of rose-colored, picot straw trimmed with a short, stiff, feather brush; thrown lightly over her shoulders was one of the new collarettes of pleureuse ostrich feathers. Between the long ends of black velvet ribbon that hung from each side of it, her white throat shaped a deep V.

On another occasion she wore a long tunic gown of rose-colored silk voile, embroidered with agaric with a long sash of black velvet ribbon, her usual band of filmy black tulle about the collarless throat and a large hat of the same soft material. In the Casino restaurant one night she was the cynosure of all eyes in a costume consisting of a long, silk Directoire coat and a white, lace-flounced skirt. The lace was the sheer, lightly embroidered Malines, used to excess this season; three flounces of it, lightly gathered, covered the skirt from belt to hem. The lovely silk was striped with pink rosebuds on white satin, alternating with stripes of willow-green; a hair-line of black divided these stripes. Long, tight sleeves turned back in cuffs of white embroidered mull, and a wide collar to match framed the throat; this shaped narrow revers as low as the waist-line and at the back dropped to the shoulder blades in a deep square.

THE AMATEUR DOG SHOW

The recent three-day Dog Show here was one of the greatest successes of the sporting season. There were some beautiful and wonderfully trained dogs, among these some of the police dogs of Paris and Belgium. The entries were restricted to amateurs, and no dealers were allowed to exhibit; women of the grand world exhibited their own dogs. The beautiful, great collie who, in the photograph on this page, sits so proudly at the feet of his equally proud owner, honored her by winning the first prize of his class.

His mistress was gowned in the most approved "doggy" fashion in a loose, straight coat and skirt of iron-gray mixed tweed; in the middle of the back the skirt lapped with a wide seam held by large buttons, covered with the reverse side of the cloth. Small cuffs and a flat collar were faced to match. The revers were of the same material as the coat, and the large rabat was of Malines lace. The hat was of fine, black picot straw trimmed only with a sunburst of white aigrettes.

The perky little creature who stands erect at the bidding of his mistress in the photograph on page 25 was also awarded the coveted red ribbon. His owner wears a costume of dark blue serge piped with black satin, and trimmed with black, satin-covered buttons. Her white straw hat is in one of the new, round shapes, with a low, round crown. This shape and another, even smaller and rounder, is, judging by what the smartest women at Monte Carlo are wearing, the last word in morning hats.

One of the astonishing police dogs, a Belgian sheep dog of the Paris corps, is shown in the photograph accomplishing the feat of scaling a plain board fence, over three metres high. He leaps to the top in one bound, then drops to the ground on the other side and scrambles at once into his race after the unfortunate person whom he is pursuing.

A NEW ATTRACTION OF MONACO

The directors of the steamship lines which convey passengers to and from the Mediterranean have, on account of the unpleasant treatment accorded passengers by the boatmen at Villefranche, abandoned that harbor for the beautiful Bay of Hercules at Monaco; and now added to the usual attractions of the Casino terraces is the interest of watching the arrival and departure of these great steamers, which land their passengers close by. A few days ago two great Cunarders, one going to, the other returning from Italy, rested all day here, allowing all who wished, to go ashore; and soon these passengers were scattered over this compact little spot; the Casino, of course, was the center of attraction. All day the terraces were crowded with people admiring the two great ships where usually only pleasure yachts are seen.

THE RACES AT MONTE CARLO

The Grand Prix, the first of the last series of races at Nice, brought out such a number of well-gowned women, the sun was so bright, the lawns of the pretty hippodrome so green, it was easy to fancy it a summer race day in the Bois. Women in white and light-colored costumes, brightened with gay parasols and feathered hats, made an enchanting, constantly shifting picture. In spite of the hot sun, however, a chill wind, as is often the case at Nice, soon came up, making additional wraps necessary. One of the most fetching tailored costumes worn that day, I thought, was of dull,

Saxe-blue serge, coarsely woven and extremely soft in texture. The skirt, one of the best among the new forms, is likely to be accepted as a general fashion. The front breadth was quite flat and straight. In the middle of the back was laid a wide, flatly pressed box-plait; on each side of it, plaits two inches in width were turned towards the front; they reached perhaps a little beyond the hips. The coat of this costume was of the jaunty, cut-away type women have so readily accepted. The only trimming was the big, ball-shaped buttons of white horn resting on a base of black horn. They adorned in clusters the revers, the cuffs and the edges of the middle plait in the back of the skirt; each button was posed at the end of a false buttonhole of white silk. A flat collar of white embroidered linen finished the neck, and there were small cuffs to match, which turned narrowly up above lace frills that fell far over the hands. With this charming costume was worn a white hat and a blue parasol, white ribbed, and with broad, white tips; the white wood handle was tied with white ribbon.

The little girl who accompanied the charming woman who wore this costume was quite as smartly dressed. She was in a red coat which quite covered her frock and long stockings of champagne-colored silk, with shoes to match. Low over her blonde head came a Panama hat, turned up from the face and trimmed with a thin wreath of pale pink roses. Her suede gloves matched her stockings and shoes.

DIVERSIONS OF THE SMART MONDE

New race bags noted that day were of brocaded silk or soft leather, long and narrow, gathered at the top and hung from a thick, double cord. The opening is on the side, after the manner of an old-fashioned purse, and a large, metal ring is pushed up or down as it is opened or closed; and apropos, the purse shape, in Gargantuan size, is preferred here to any other for theatre and opera use.

The most popular diversions of the fashionable world on the Riviera are the Tuesday and Friday receptions given at the Imperial Park Country Club at Nice. On these special reception days many private tea parties are given. The tables, decorated lavishly with flowers of the Riviera, are arranged in a vast, stone-paved hall under a domed roof supported by great pillars wreathed in living vines; electric bulbs, hidden in baskets of fresh flowers which hang from the balcony, give a soft light. The center of the hall is reserved for dancing, which goes on all during tea. The couples pause now and then for cake or tea and then whirl away again.

TEA ON THE GREAT TERRACE

On other days, tea is served on the terrace, from which one gains a magnificent view of the sea and mountains. Here are set tables and chairs, sheltered from the sun by great umbrellas, and if the wind is too strong on March days, there are roofed retreats where one may sit comfortably watching the roller skating or a tennis match.

Once or twice a week, dinner dances are given, and on these occasions the gowning is superb. A magnificent gown worn at the dance last Saturday night was composed of white satin and silver lace; big, ball-shaped, satin-covered buttons closed the plain satin, front breadth; at the back a wide, double box-plait shaped a square train which hung loose from the waist, like a mammoth sash. A breadth of the silver-embroidered lace draped the skirt in pointed tunic fashion, and a strip of lace on the front of the corsage, between the soft, satin folds, gave the effect of a waistcoat. A deep red silk rose, crushed against one of black silk, made a bright spot of color on the gleaming white.

MONTE CARLO ON PANNIERS

We hear much of panniers. They are pictured in the magazines, and models of them are displayed in the shops and by couturiers, but the panniers really worn are not panniers at all. At none of the balls I have attended here, where the most fashionable women of all nations wear their newest costumes, have I seen one real pannier. True, there are soft, low, side draperies which gracefully merge into the train and do suggest panniers, but they are very different from the real panniers of old times.

A feature pleasant to note in the gowning of fashionable women here is the absence of exaggerations. There are graceful draperies and softly flowing trains, and every part of gown and decoration is in harmony. At this moment the madness of the recent past has been quite discarded.

There are still, it must be confessed, many incongruities. The first one that comes to mind is the Directoire collar attached to ordinary linen blouses. As this strange mode has already been exhibited in a great department shop at Nice, its course is probably run. Equally incongruous are the high neck ruffs of perishable tulle, and the uncomfortable, long, tight sleeves with wide lace frills half covering the hands. With the coming of summer women will surely rebel against them.

At Maison Sert-Migno, at Nice, I was shown several exquisite novelties in neckwear. A boa, composed of the ostrich feathers called pleureuses, lies perfectly flat on the shoulders with the feather fronds falling to the depth of a quarter of a yard. It is not designed, apparently, to protect the throat, since it does not close in front and ends on the bust. The ends are finished with loops of four-inch, velvet ribbon. Usually this charming adjunct to an elegant toilette is made of mixed colors, rich blue and black, white and black, or white and gray. In the latter case the velvet ends are gray, and always they are tipped and weighted with long tassels of heavy silk or of jetted silk strands. An ostrich-feather boa gives a certain air which makes it always popular, but the round boa gives a hunched appearance, so that it is best to eschew them. These new boas, however, leave the figure with its natural outline, and the softness of the feathers is most attractive.

It is curious to note the absence of flowers in hat trimmings. Just at present, feathers are much preferred; when flowers are used at all they are generally arranged in tall sprays, after the manner of a feather.

Astride or Not Astride?—American Country Squires and Feminine Protagonists of Reform—The London Season

SPRING has seen the revival of polo. At Lakewood there has been series after series of practice games, and during the winter there was a succession of polo events in Southern California and at Aiken. Mr. Harry Payne Whitney, a tremendous enthusiast on the subject, came back from the continent early in March so as to lose no time, and Miss Eleanora Sears, that most strenuous sportswoman, is still one of our champion players. Many women have adopted her style of riding astride and of wearing men's breeches.

The question of whether or not this is entirely proper is not one that I care to discuss except in the abstract. Conventions are peculiar, and though they do not affect morals as much as we sometimes think, yet they are a safeguard. When we glance at past generations through the eyes of Jane Austin or Maria Edgeworth, or study later times in the novels and essays of the early and mid-Victorian periods, we find many rules that we would now call absurd laid down about what young women should do and what was considered unmaidenly or not exactly proper. And yet in the eighteenth century morals and manners were a bit lax, notwithstanding the minuet.

In spite of the fact that our grandmothers in the nineteenth century (rather affected personages) found it exceedingly ladylike to faint away when anything shocked them, they were not, according to our ideas, any too squeamish on certain moralities. For years, women who smoked cigarettes were under the ban, for no reason in the world except that it was considered "rapid." We excused the custom in Russian and Eastern women, but were wary of the fair Parisian with such a habit. Only recently aldermen in New York were passing ordinances forbidding women to smoke in public places. And not so long ago, to return to our muttoms, many women riders would have preferred to have been dragged to their death by a runaway horse rather than to wear sensible and safe attire. For the old riding habits were a menace to life and limb and side saddles were dangerous, even not considering emergencies. We are not now scandalized at the divided skirt and many women ride astride. Miss Sears is a thorough sportswoman who will not spoil her sport for the sake of a worn-out and silly convention.

SQUIRING IT IN THE SUBURBS

With May the country season will be in full blast. We have become suburbanites, heart and soul. And I do not wonder, for New York grows more contracted each year. Slowly our best streets are being invaded by business. In a dozen years Fifth Avenue will not boast a single private residence. Fifty-seventh Street has already fallen by the wayside, and shops are cropping up in this select end of town. We do not find the same conditions in Paris and London, because those cities are larger, but even the Avenue des Champs Élysées has changed character a great deal in the last ten years, and many people are leaving London to go out to Kensington and other outlying districts. Hempstead Heath, I hear, is soon to be converted into a fashionable residential section.

So we have found that the only way to keep away from trade is to purchase estates on Long Island or on the Hudson or to invest in real estate in a few favored localities, or at Tuxedo, thus we can live delightfully quite near enough to town. At present we have to reach our estates by the comparatively slow motor, but within a few years aeroplanes will be perfected for practical use. And really we do not find life in the country, far from metropolitan distractions and gaieties though it is, at all boring. Life here is freer, there is greater chance for hospitality and to gather a little circle of congenial people. It is the ideal life for the man of leisure, for even with a small estate his time is pleasantly and profitably occupied.

THE FEMININE UPLIFT

It is women who find it hardest to tear themselves from urban interests. They are so given over these days to lectures on music, literature, politics and to reforms and charities of all kinds. When I arrived in New York at mid-Lent, I found everyone wild on this subject of lectures. There were mornings of philosophy and afternoons of wonderful adventures in the jungle, as described by Paul Rainey and illustrated by his marvelous moving pictures. House decoration was amply treated by Miss Elsie de Wolfe; Miss Ethel Arnold gave talks on the suffrage question, and Mrs. Mackay herself came forward and made an address on the same subject. At one of the Fifth Avenue Episcopal churches a missionary from China held congregations spell-bound, and Father Vaughan and Father

Miss Agnes Ladson of Atlanta, who, on April 10th, was married to Mr. Charles A. Dana of New York

Benson preached to thousands on social questions of special moment to Roman Catholics.

Then to occupy the ladies' leisure moments there were amateur theatricals, operettas and concerts. Mrs. Vanderbilt threw her beautiful home open for an exhibition of laces for charity—an object lesson, no doubt, to many, and quite according to the European custom. I see that it has been followed up by a suggestion to give such views of other houses, both in town and in the country. This is done in England and France, and a small admission fee is charged, which is applied to some worthy and popular charity.

SUMMER FORECASTS

From present indications, it is to be an extremely brilliant summer, and many families who have been absent for years will open their houses. We grow more cosmopolitan each year as we attract more foreigners to our shores. If rumor be true, we will have not only a son of the Kaiser at Newport this summer, but, notwithstanding official denials, the Connaughts will pay us another visit. We did excellently well on the occasion of the short visit of the Duke and Duchess and of the Princess Patricia, but we may have to brush up a little if the royal personages intend to make a stay. Of course, a summer resort does not demand strict etiquette, and the various royalties who have visited Newport in the past have enjoyed it hugely on that account.

We are a bit hazy on the subject of precedence, as a recent incident in Boston shows. There the Governor of the state refused to attend a banquet at which the President and Cardinal O'Connell were guests because he was not to be seated at the right hand of the Chief Executive. That was all wrong. A Cardinal is everywhere regarded as a Prince of the Blood, and has precedence over Ambassadors.

I remember discussing this some years ago, when the question came up in regard to Cardinal Gibbons. He, with his suite and many church dignitaries, was on shipboard. Places were assigned for him and his party at the captain's table. A civil dignitary of Rome, a functionary of much importance in a way, was also on board, and the captain placed him at his right hand. After the first meal, the Cardinal and his priests seated themselves at another table, giving as an excuse that they liked being together, but at the same time administering a silent rebuke to the captain, who at once saw his mistake and tried to rectify it. Perhaps to some these little questions of precedence seem trivial, and a person with radical ideas would insist that they ought not to

UNTRAINED CUSTODIANS OF FUNDS

IN a money-ridden country like ours, one would think that the almoners of our all-important wealth would receive at least an elementary business training. It very frequently falls to the woman of the family to steward the household funds, to execute an inheritance, or to manage for a time a business enterprise, yet the cases when they receive any training for this work are few. We do not even shoulder the responsibility of providing training for those who must enter the business field, and we stoutly deny that those who marry need such training. Yet an unbelievably large per cent. of women never marry, and those who do are, by reason of their being so generally the custodians of the household funds, not less in need of some business education; for all the training she receives for meeting these obligations, she might as well be an inhabitant of some celestial sphere where buying and selling are unknown.

EVEN those who have always lived in comparative luxury and who are amply provided for in case their source of support is removed, are sometimes, through this same lack of training, brought to destitution; for as they are obviously unfit to manage an estate themselves, it is left to the care of trustees who, either through carelessness, stupidity or dishonesty and because their ward is incapable of checking their management, shortly dissipate her estate. When the woman is elderly the tragedy is most grim, for, with neither youth, skill, nor training, she must endeavor to provide for herself and very often for a family or else to suffer the ignominy of receiving help from friends. It would seem that the men who have labored to amass wealth would realize the importance of its proper management; but that is one of the anomalies in American character. By some method, private or public, all women should receive at least elementary training in the basal business principles. A short law course at one of the universities is a not inadequate preparation for the management of an estate.

WE have only pity for women in such stress of circumstances for we recognize that they are in no way to blame for their misfortunes, but for another class of women, no less the victims of a vicious system of education which ignores an inevitable phase of experience, we have only censure. The extravagance we charge to women in the most diverse grades of society arises, not as we allege, from self-indulgence, but from a lack of an appreciation of values, and this extravagance must continue to cause friction within the family and to aggravate the social unrest until such time as we recognize its cause and take measures to remedy it.

IN the lower grades of society this lack of business training is a serious handicap in the home where, according to qualified investigators such as Miss Ida Tarbell, the more than ample wages of a man are wasted by the wife's incompetence. All sorts of advantages are taken of her ignorance at the cost of much anxiety and deprivation to the whole family. That an ignorant woman with no training and no experience should be the family treasurer, entrusted with from seventy-five to ninety per cent. of the family income, passes the boundary of absurdity. It is her lamentable ignorance that is largely responsible for the poverty and misery in the lower social strata. With proper management of the household funds a large proportion of these poverty-tortured families could have decent, sanitary homes, sufficient nourishing food and other necessities of life. In all this the community has a stake, since intelligent management in the home would greatly decrease the amount of public funds dispersed for relief of the poor.

THE establishment in some of the schools of classes in cooking and the care of children are encouraging first steps; until recently, except in the higher grades which the children of the poor seldom reach, no attempt was made to widen this training to include a business education for girls. The Chamber of Commerce has, however, lately initiated a movement, with which the school authorities of the city are thoroughly in accord, to include commercial education in the curriculum of the elementary classes of the grammar schools. This course will give the girls as well as the boys training in the essentials of business methods. The incorporation of such classes in the public schools throughout the country would undoubtedly work considerable reforms. Nowhere, not even in the field of business itself, is business training more needed at this time than in the home.

THE TOILETTES OF MADAME LA MÈRE

The Dress of Ceremony and Other Gowns Worn by the Bride's Mother at the Entertainments Incident to a Wedding

WHILE the bride-elect is selecting her trousseau, her mother, who, in the capacity of chaperon, must entertain and be entertained as much as the bride herself, is busy adding considerably to her own wardrobe. Not only must the gown for the ceremony be provided, but also new dresses to wear while entertaining the house guests directly before and after the wedding. Her first care is, of course, the costume to be worn at the church and at the breakfast which follows the ceremony.

THE GOWN OF CEREMONY

If the mother of a bride-elect has white hair, she cannot do better than to copy for this dress the pale gray chiffon and lavender-shot gray taffeta shown in the lower left-hand corner of page 38. From the knees up, the foundation of the gown is a pale gray satin, and from the knees down, of gray taffeta shot with lavender. At the left side, close to the floor, the skirt is caught into a single, short loop that stands outward like a wing; at the right side, the material falls plainly, and at the back there is a pointed train, which is by no means prominent, as the skirt is exceptionally long all around and hangs about the feet in draping folds.

Thousands of tiny pendants of gray silk make up the design which borders and weights the gray chiffon overdress. On this overdress, but following the line of the wide band of filmy white lace on the underskirt, is a perfectly plain band of the gray chiffon caught down with à jour; above this the drapery is gathered under a belt of the shot fabric finished with a rose of the same silk nestling in its green taffeta leaves. Over the bodice-mounting of white chiffon, interlined with white satin up to the bust curve, gray chiffon veils a simulated bolero of the filmy white lace; this is turned back from the bolero fronts to form revers, thus marking a slightly darker line from shoulders to belt and giving an appearance of slenderness to the figure. Down between these revers run two narrow strips of black net headed by a double loop bow of the same transparency; this is attached to a stock of the fine, white lace, topped by a band of the net. Pendants of gray silk border the kimono sleeves in a series of Van Dykes. The hat is a simple, Quakerish shape with a single black aigrette, which appears to be shot directly through the upturned, gray crin brim.

A demi-toilette, shown to the right of this gown, would prove exceedingly useful this summer, as it is just the thing to wear to suburban race meets or country club afternoon concerts.

DEMI-TOILETTE FOR THE RACES

The black satin underdress carries a wide panel of white chiffon running from the throat to the feet, but caught in slightly at the waist with a belt of white linen, embroidered with purple, mercerized cotton. A purple-edged, linen button trims each purple-piped linen cuff. These brighten the sleeves of black over white chiffon, but the narrow, white chiffon collar, rounded at the back, is relieved by no touch of color. With this gown, which, despite its trimness, is and appears to be supremely comfortable, is worn a black satin, coat-shaped upper garment with low-rolling lapels which, ten inches below the waist-line, fasten loosely with a single, black satin button. At each side a square train is looped up a half-yard above the floor with four satin buttons, above which are three more buttons. At the back this trailing coat is very loose and stands well away from the waist-line; the fullness is gathered into a cording which shows only at the back, as the front waist-line is concealed by the deep revers. The all-black hat of picot straw, trimmed with an aigrette, is turned up all around, but at the left side it runs markedly higher and is posed on the head so as to cover the brow and most of the hair.

FORMAL DINNER GOWNS

Two new dinner gowns, at least, will be needed for the entertainments incident to a wedding. One admirable model is sketched in the upper, left-hand corner of page 38. If a high-necked guimpe of black satin relieved with violet and white be ordered with it, it may even be worn to the theatre. The scarf was never more charmingly treated than here. Twin scarfs, starting from under a panel which forms a square train and is looped up half-way down the back, cross the hips to the front of the skirt, meet above the knees, and at the ankles fall into lovely, soft folds produced by the biasing of the material. The lower half of the bodice is of black satin embroidered in two shades of violet, each figure outlined with dull gold threads; the upper half is of black, lace-veiled, flesh-colored chiffon defined by narrow bands of black satin, embroidered with violet dots so irregularly shaped with gold threads that only enough of the satin shows to prove that it really is the foundation for the handwork. The V-shaped "modesty" veiling the breast is of flesh-tinted chiffon, and the cuffs finishing the sleeves are of black satin edged with dull gold braid. There is a narrow girdle of black satin, and the same fabric is used in the slippers, which are trimmed with a black velvet bow over a triangular tongue of the violet-and-gold embroidered material. A black aigrette hair ornament completes this stunning, yet wholly dignified, evening costume.

WHITE SATIN WITH PANNIERS

A second evening gown, most picturesque for a middle-aged mother, is shown on page 37. It has a short, trained, white satin underskirt that is rather narrow and displays a decided tendency to fall in below the knees. In the back the pannier of white taffeta with violet satin stripes, forms a point, finished with an ornament of pearls; at the sides it is looped up several inches below the hips so as to add nothing to their bulk; in front is a tablier of white lace, edged with pearls. A pattern outlined in the tiniest of pearls runs from the lower edge of the tablier to its center, and lines of pearls define the two points of lace trimming the fronts of the bodice. In lieu of sleeves there are falling bands of pearl-embroidered white net which droop toward the elbows. Encircling the waist at its normal position, but running under the lace tablier, is a white satin girdle terminating in a bow of four loops, two of them faced with violet. This bow is so large that it runs across the right underarm seam and covers considerable of that side of the bodice.

THE SEMI-DRAPED SKIRT

A youthful matron chose from a wonderful display of tailored suits one of purple and black changeable taffeta, sketched to the left of the page 37. At the back the overskirt is caught under the long postilion belonging to the coat. Only at the waist-line does this jacket button; from there it slopes backward so abruptly as to form a group of tiny folds under the arms. The sleeves are very short, scarcely covering the elbows, and have turned-back cuffs edged with a self-colored silk puffing.

The pear-shaped section at the bottom of the back of the jacket starts a few inches above the waist-line and overlaps the postilion; it is embroidered with purple floss. This decoration, prominent because of its single tone, is repeated on the back of the collar. At the uppermost edge of the portion partially encircling the throat and covering the short fronts, this collar is trimmed with a self-puffing, and where it crosses the shoulders it forms little folds similar to those beneath the arms at the waist-line of the jacket.

THE SEPARATE SILK COAT

Taffeta of a shade of gray so dark and dull that it resembles unpolished gun-metal and might be mistaken for black, is used for the separate coat sketched on page 37, which would prove exceedingly useful to the middle-aged matron. Straight and scant, deeply Vd at the throat and sloping away from the knees, its lapping fronts are fastened below the waist-line with big buttons covered with shirred taffeta and surrounded by puffings of the same silk.

This method of trimming is repeated in the border of the coat and of the collar, with the addition at each edge of a cording which in turn is edged with a ruche. Just below the collar on each side a cording starts and runs down both sides of the garment to the hips, and around to the back to form a deep curve; the lower portion of the coat is finely gathered to this cording; this gives a slight fullness most becoming to the matronly figure. Cordings also emphasize the low shoulder-lines and run down to the wrists, where the sleeves are gathered into tight-fitting, pointed cuffs trimmed with buttons. Gray chiffon with a large flower design in several shades of mauve lines this coat. With it is worn a light-weight hat of gray, English picot straw, trimmed with two slender, tightly curled ostrich plumes of the same dull, neutral tones.

TRIMMING A BROCADED GOWN

Perfectly simple and delightfully comfortable is the breakfast gown at the top of this page. It is of black, large figured, brocaded crêpe de Chine, made with a scant skirt, over which is a drapery gathered all around into a waist band and falling in a loose puff to the ankles. Down the front, from the bottom of the white net guimpe to the hem, is a row of heavy, black silk tassels. The gown fastens at the middle-back under a square panel extending from neck to belt. The low shoulder-line is defined by a cording. The sleeves, narrow at the top and puffed at the bottom, are perfect complements of the puffed overskirt. The bodice falls loosely away from the girdle and gives the impression of covering a straight, uncompressed figure. Low-heeled satin slippers brocaded with the design of the crêpe de Chine are provided to wear with this morning costume.

VOGUE POINTS FROM PARIS

AN unusual variety of sleeves is noted in the new gowns. Sleeves of great fullness are gathered into small armholes, and at the elbow gathered again into loose, wide cuffs, from which hang deep lace flounces. Laid close and flat at the top, the fullness of a new sleeve drops into wide, loose folds at the elbows; below, it is wrinkled into a wide, tight band and finished with double frills of fine lace.

Other sleeves are extremely full and are gathered into small armholes. The length is shirred on the inside to fit the bend of the arm, and the fullness falls away from the back of the arm.

The long Moyenâge sleeve on a gown of changeable taffeta has a high shoulder puff of mousseline de soie matching in color the bertha trimming on the corsage. Even prettier than this is a long, tight sleeve of much wrinkled mousseline de soie, that emerges from under the long armhole of a silk corsage. The edges of the armholes are finished with a bias band and trimmed with buttons and mock buttonholes. It will be seen from these descriptions that lace plays an important part in sleeve decoration, and in a manner quite novel; many years have passed since these extremely wide lace flounces have been in fashion.

Skirts are the chief bone of contention this year and show many pleasing variations from the old mode. An old-fashioned skirt, presented as an extreme novelty, has the back breadth covered, from belt to hem, with a series of softly falling puffs of graduated widths. The front of the skirt is slightly draped. Of the same period is the overskirt of another dress, made entirely of puffings separated by slightly puckered bands of velvet ribbon. It drops low in the middle of the back and front and is draped on each side.

Marquissette and sheer voiles are used for the sun-plaited and accordion-plaited skirts that slender women gladly welcome. Other plaited skirts are laid in two-inch plaits stitched on the edges to within a short distance of the bottom, then left free. Sometimes these skirts are hung from a small, round yoke. A satisfactory way of gaining increased fullness in a tailored skirt without adding to the bulk is a gored seam in the middle of the back. It is laid flat, stitched on the edge to simulate a fold, and trimmed with buttons.

A straight seam, placed anywhere on a skirt—at one side of the back or the front, or in the middle of either—is seen in the majority of short skirts, and buttons, in any one of myriad styles, are always used to adorn this seam.

Worth uses quantities of tassels for skirts and sleeve trimming. He shows his dislike of the crude colors of the season by softening them with lace and gauze.

An odd but pleasing fancy, noted on a little dress of dark blue taffeta, was a long sash of soft, white liberty satin. It was knotted lightly at one side of the back, and the longest of the two uneven ends touched the hem of the skirt.

THE TROUSSEAU OF LADY HOWARD DE WALDEN

THE old Parish Church of Marylebone, London, standing back from the Marylebone Road, has seen many weddings, but probably never one like that which took place there on the nineteenth of February. Usually when a peer of the realm marries, he chooses one of the fashionable churches—St. Margaret's, Westminster or St. George's in Hanover Square—not a little parish church. So it happened that only a group of inquisitive children, peering through the railings of the parish church, saw the modest procession that attended one of the most important weddings of the season, which was being quietly celebrated a day before anyone expected it.

The church was practically empty—only the near relatives of bride and bridegroom and a few others who by accident had learned of the date of the ceremony attended. It was decorated, not more elaborately than for its usual simple weddings, with smilax and white camellias; with these the pillars were twined, and the aisle was brilliant with large bouquets of red roses. Massed high on the altar were great piles of white lilies and red roses, with here and there touches of marguerites, the bride's name flower.

STEALING A MARCH ON SOCIETY

Although everyone has been greatly interested ever since this important engagement was announced to find out the date and place of the ceremony, society and anxious Londoners in general were not enlightened. Miss van Raalte had fully determined to have a quiet wedding. Lord Howard de Walden is one of the richest peers in the kingdom; his property in Marylebone brings him in an income of about £300,000 a year. He is a patron of the drama and,

The waist was outlined with a threading of pale blue satin ribbon.

Another set was made with a straight yoke formed of triangular medallions of deep coffee-tinted Irish lace. Into these medallions were fitted pieces of snow-white Mechlin lace, similarly shaped, and there were occasional oval medallions of the finest lawn, hand-embroidered in Empire wreaths.

There were two sets of fine, pale pink silk crystalline, the yoke and sleeves of which were formed of cobwebby Valenciennes lace, in a rose-leaf pattern. The waist was run with pink satin ribbon. A set of pale blue crystalline and a set of white linon de fil were made in the same design, with Milanese lace used for the yoke and sleeves of the nightdress and for the yoke of the chemise. This lacy bodice was made in fichu design, and the waist was outlined with a threading of blue satin ribbon, into which was tucked a bouquet of tiny, pale pink satin roses.

Some sets of linon de fil were even more simple, with delicate hand stitchery of tucks and narrow bands of real Valenciennes lace, the chief charm of which was the fineness of the materials. One set was inset with net medallions embroidered in forget-me-not designs.

For a rest robe the future Lady Howard de Walden selected pale pink velvet lined with pink gauze and developed as shown on this page. This is to be draped round to fasten at the left side under a silken knot decorated with a bunch of full-blown pink roses of silk gauze. It had a wide collar and deep cuffs of old, tinted Valenciennes lace.

But in spite of money and position he is shy, and he also desired a quiet wedding, which at first seemed almost impossible. Then it was rumored that the wedding was to take place on Tuesday, February 20th. After that it was an easy matter to steal a march on society and be married the day before.

WEDDING GOWN OF A SPORTSWOMAN

Miss van Raalte's trousseau is unusually interesting because she does not care at all for clothes. She is a notable sportswoman, who rides and shoots and golfs, and so has little need of feminine frills. The feminine journalists, one hears, had a strenuous chase to discover where the wedding dress was being made and just what it was to be. When they thought they had run their sartorial quarry to earth, they invariably found they had been following the wrong scent.

"Miss van Raalte's wedding dress, Madame?" enquired each courteous costumer. "No, we are not making the wedding dress—a teagown, yes, or an evening dress."

So there was some preparation for the surprise of seeing the bride in a simple gown of gray crêpe de beauté and a smart blue hat richly massed with blue lancer plumes.

And her other costumes were in keeping. Her traveling suit was the very plainest, rough, navy blue serge coat and skirt, buttoned down the side and without trimming.

LINGERIE OF THE TROUSSEAU

But however simple a woman's taste may be, she cannot resist the charm of dainty underwear, and the sportswoman who affects severity of dress is not less difficult to please in lingerie than more fussily dainty women. Simplicity marked this wonderful trousseau of lingerie, some pieces of which are shown on page 62. Each garment was marked with an old English "M," surmounted by a coronet, and each piece or set was laid in a white box tied with blue silk gauze ribbon, and sprinkled with violet and lavender sachet powder.

One set of underwear, which consisted of nightgown, chemise and drawers, was made of the finest linon de fil, a material as delicate as a ninon, but woven in linen threads. The yoke of nightgown and chemise was composed entirely of silk Blonde lace, inset with a very fine design in Cluny insertion.

SMART FASHIONS for LIMITED INCOMES

A Trousseau that Answers All Needs of the Summer Wardrobe, Can, if Carefully Planned, be Kept within the $500 Mark

IT is exceptional when a bride assembles a trousseau that is just what she needs and no more. Almost always she buys too much, so that before a season is gone she finds her closets cluttered with gowns that are only half worn and fast going out of style. Whether the expenditure is to be large or small it should include no more than an ordinary, well-planned spring and summer wardrobe. In the name of trousseau one commits many foolish extravagances, and a stern self-discipline is the only insurance from after regrets. But if the delight of having everything new at this time is to run away with one, it is best to let off exuberance in the direction of underwear, for this will be useful for years to come.

The woman of limited means faces a special problem when it comes to purchasing a wedding outfit, and so she should start with a clear idea of just the sort of wedding she wants if she is to escape the pitfalls of debt. The most sensible course is to dispense altogether with a wedding dress and be married in an afternoon or a traveling costume, for the conventional white satin bridal gown is almost always an elephant on one's hands, and no matter how well re-made as an evening gown, always bears the stamp of a bygone ceremonial. But the hold of sentiment is strong, and the ma-majority of women strain a point to be married in white. No wedding dress is included among the accompanying illustrations, but if one is desired, pattern No. 2104-F on page 59 of the March 15th issue is an exquisite model, fairly elaborate, and No. 1736-F, a much simpler one. Either gown may be carried out economically by using an inexpensive satin with a slightly draped covering of Callot chiffon, which is delightfully soft. For an all-satin gown, nothing but the best quality will do, for nothing is worse than cheap satin. The whole trimming of the gown could be of white Alençon net or tulle, with a conventional pattern in heavy silk floss run at the edges in place of a lace border. Such a pattern need not be fine at all; indeed, the coarser the work the more effective. Two other models

Excellent model for a separate waist. Even for summer wear the new, soft taffetas are being much used for such waists

The accepted costume for sports and a demity dress for quieter morning activities

The diagonal cut on skirt and the odd, deep cuffs are accessories to smartness

Such clever touches as the inverted neck frill and tassels distinguish this frock are also shown on page 53 of this issue.

But the traveling suit cannot be thus easily disposed of; it is for even the most modest trousseau, absolutely indispensable. The sensible thing is to choose both a color and a material that will be as useful next fall, and possibly even next winter, as now. Taffeta or charmeuse should be waived for woolens, such as serge, tweed and ratine.

THE TRAVELING SUIT

The newest material of all, and a great favorite this spring, is whipcord, which would serve equally well as a spring suit and one for cooler weather. And no color is more chic nor more fresh than dark blue, which year after year holds its own as a spring color. The tones toward black are far more satisfactory than more brilliant ones. A good model for the suit is that sketched on this page, with its touches of white ratine on collar and cuffs. The matching diagonal arrangement on skirt and coat is well handled and very smart. If this mode does not answer the requirements, the full collection on pages 54 and 55 of the March 1st issue offers ample choice. The simplicity of No. 2122-E is a favorite with many; it is most economical as to material, and the bias back is very becoming. No. 2102-E is a French model, a style that is being shown in numerous variations at the most exclusive shops. It is the sort of suit that can be lightened for the warm weather by touches of black and white, green and white, or other combinations, and then sobered again in the autumn with black velvet and military braid.

A WAIST FOR THE SUIT

No investment could give better service than a matching waist for the suit. Chiffon is still a favorite material for separate blouses, even for warm summer days, but taffeta is the last fancy of the fashionable Parisienne, and in the very soft qualities it is by no means an oppressive material. The separate waist

There is no more charming model for a peignoir than the ruffled petticoat and draped overskirt of La Pompadour shown on page 41 is particularly good as to line, and with the yoke of thin white satin and the lace at the throat, is well adapted for summer wear. In chiffon it would be pretty made over white, and if in taffeta there need be no lining, and the point on the front of the waist might be made of the skirt material. Those who like the low collar will find two charming blouses in this style on page 60 of the March 1st issue, Nos. 2111-E and 2087-E. The first is delightfully cool, one of those dainty French models with a ribbon run around the bodice under the chiffon and tied in a flat bow at the front, and finished with fine cuffs and collar of embroidered material. The other is excellent for taffeta, which shapes well to its cut, and there is a great deal of allover lace to lighten it.

THE AFTERNOON FROCK

There is not much question as to what material most women will choose for an afternoon frock, such as is shown opposite the suit. Taffeta in its new-old guise is so charming that few can resist it, and a taffeta gown bought for the summer may be worn for luncheon under a fur coat next winter. The model shown here, though it has the new fullness at the waist and a very clever drapery on the skirt, does not depart from the slender silhouette and comes forward in easy folds about the feet. It is of an extreme simplicity, yet lifted above the commonplace by all the new little touches that mark a recent design. We haven't seen before the little upside-down tulle frill that fits into the V of the bodice and is caught against the chiffon yoke, nor the front finishing of cords and tassels running down as far as an almost hidden plait that opens at the knees. Such a frock might be developed in a plain taffeta of leaf-green, Wedgwood blue, coral or old-brown. Coral is included, as in taffeta the tone of this color is exquisite, and it is being used in many of the new models, but it is not a sensible choice for her whose clothes must be frequently worn. Besides the plain varieties there are lovely changeable taffetas in narrow, almost invisible stripes that make up smartly.

On page 64 of the March 15th issue is a collection of patterns for afternoon gowns, all of which embody the latest fashion ideas, but are so simple of construction that difficulties are either annihilated or so reduced that the small dressmaker can easily manage them. No. 2058-F and No. 2100-F are especially recommendable as being not too pronounced to stay in fashion for more than one season.

As to afternoon gowns for hottest days, one can do no better than to go to one of the large shops that carry such excellent ready-made copies of French gowns and select one or perhaps two lingerie frocks. At one of the shops there is such a pretty little model in white washable French voile with yoke, cuffs and girdle trimmings of Irish lace for $9.75. It fastens in the front with crochet buttons, has fine tucks reaching below the hips and three large tucks at the bottom. Selected with taste and worn with distinction these gowns are as good in general effect as those that are three times their price. One should choose the simplest models rather than those loaded down with trimmings of imitation lace and embroidery, and give to it a touch of novelty and distinction by some unique trimming.

MORNING COSTUMES

For summer mornings two styles of costume are needed—one the trig, tailored skirt of white wash material with a smart blouse, either tailored or just across the line from severity like the model on page 41. The skirt there shown is the model that well-dressed women have chosen for so long in preference to all others that it has come to be almost a uniform for tennis and golf. It may be had with a broad box plait in the back or with a plain habit back. But if one prefers a paneled or tunic effect there is a splendid selection of skirts suitable for this wear on page 69 of Vogue of March 15th. One must have for this skirt some plain shirts cut after pattern No. 1915-F or 2117-F on pages 66 and 67 in the same issue. White China silk is the popular material for these, and it is best not to economize in the quality of silk; $1.50 or $2 the yard is about the price to pay, and these shirts will wear, wash and keep their color better than those in a cheaper quality. As only three yards is needed for each, and four shirts will suffice, this is not an extravagance. The blouse in the sketch may be made of handkerchief linen or of lawn if silk is too expensive. Hand-run tucks add greatly to the appearance of the waist as does real edging, Irish or Cluny, on the collar and cuffs. The hat, a black, unconventional shape with pompons, is an excellent outing model which one ought to be able to get for $10.

The other costume is a dimity morning frock the original of which was in light green with a white leather belt and a bit of macramé lace at neck and cuffs. It fastened with slantwise, crochet loops. The material for such a simple gown would cost not more than $3 or $4. A cotton would be preferable to any of the summer silks; dimities which are very cheap and come in charming colorings, both flowered and striped, are especially dainty, and if washed with care and dried in the shade will hold their colors as long as the material lasts. The garden hat shown with this gown is in a natural color straw with a crown band and a brim facing of plaited light blue taffeta and a cluster of pink roses.

THE EVENING GOWN

The first sketch on this page shows one of those delightful combinations that at once attract by their originality and smartness and yet are most utilitarian in character. The supple satin is in raisin-purple, while the entire top of the bodice above the lace cuffs and crosspiece is in foliage-green chiffon over flesh-colored net. There is no finish at the neck save the selvage. The gathered panel at the back, above the lace inset, is also of chiffon. Chantilly lace dyed to match the satin is mounted on green, and at the front there is a purple silk rose embedded in green leaves. One would look far before finding anything at once so good looking and so exactly the thing for a wardrobe

Pretty bureau scarfs add greatly to the appearance of the bedroom, and really lovely ones can be bought very inexpensively. Illustrated in the middle of this page is an exceedingly effective scarf of embroidered linen with filet motifs and Cluny lace insertions. It is made in two sizes: 20 x 45 inches, $12.75, and 20 x 54 inches, $15.

A particularly charming design is embroidered on the scarf sketched in the upper left-hand corner. The eyelet combined with the French embroidery is always delicate, and the deep, three-point scallops add greatly to the daintiness of the scarf. It measures 20 x 54 inches, and costs $12.

Less expensive is the scarf on the right, measuring 14 inches in width and 54 inches in length. Above the hem it is bordered on all four sides by a band of hemstitching alternating with French embroidery. Price, $10. To match it are two mats, measuring 7 x 7 inches, which cost $1.40 apiece, and a larger one, 7 inches wide by 12 long, is priced at $2.85.

A VARIETY OF TOWELS

These form a very important part of the linen supply, and the variety in design as well as in texture and price is overwhelming when one must make a choice. The face towels shown on the lower left of the page are all excellent, and range in price from $6.50 to $15 a dozen. The one in the lower right-hand corner is of hemstitched linen with a damask border. It measures 22 x 39 inches; price, $6.50 a dozen. On the left of this is another of finer material, and in the damask border is woven a medallion in which the initial may be embroidered. Without the initial the price is $12 a dozen. Just above this is one still finer which has a scalloped edge. The fabric is beautiful, and the satin border of poppies is exceedingly charming. It is 25 x 40 inches, and is priced at $13 a dozen.

Guest towels should be included in the chest. Most attractive is the original of the one in the upper right-hand corner. The satin damask border above the scalloped edge is very dainty, and the wreath of ivy leaves makes a charming frame for an initial. These measure 15 x 24 inches, and $6 is the price by the dozen.

The bath towels reproduced in the lower right-hand corner are made of Turkish toweling of the best quality and show the new stamping. These towels can be bought for from $8 a dozen up to $21. That on the right-hand side sells for $13 a dozen. Of course, the monogram is extra, and this is beautifully embroidered in any color at a cost of $1.75 for each towel. The other towel is priced at $12 a dozen, and the monogram on this is woven in the material at a cost of $1 extra a towel. The bath mat sketched above is quite the best of its kind. It is 27 inches in width and 44 in length and sells for $2.25. With the woven monogram the price is $4.

HANDSOME LUNCHEON SETS

The three circular luncheon sets illustrated on the opposite page give a representative range in style and price, though, of course, there are sets more or less expensive. Those shown are chosen for their practicability as well as beauty. The centerpiece and doilies in the upper left-hand corner are made of fine linen with a design in which French embroidery, needle-point medallions and filet lace are elaborately combined. The set, which includes a centerpiece and two dozen doilies, costs $125.

The solid embroidery and French seeding executed in a pretty bow-knot design makes the set shown below a more practical one; with two dozen doilies it is sold for $41.50.

The third set is really remarkably good value. The Madeira eyelet embroidery achieves a beauty quite out of proportion to its simplicity, and makes a most attractive "every-day" set. The centerpiece with three dozen doilies sells for $17.50. With two dozen doilies it can be bought for $21.50.

LUNCHEON AND TEA CLOTHS

Linen etamine is a very new and extremely popular material of which to make luncheon cloths, and so attractive and serviceable are they that every bride should have at least one in her chest. The cloth at the lower left-hand corner is made of this fabric striped and with a woven figure and a band of hand-made drawnwork above the hem. It measures one yard and a quarter square and is priced at $3.75, while the napkins are $4.50 a dozen. A Gothic letter is used with success on this set; on the cloth it is two inches in height, and costs 36 cents to embroider, and for the three-quarter-inch letter on the napkins 15 cents each is charged.

Tea cloths are almost unlimited in variety of design and price. In the lower right-hand corner is an exquisite cloth of finest linen edged with Cluny lace with motifs of needle-point, filet medallions and English eyelet embroidery. Price, $37.50. The napkins to match have a band of drawnwork inside a narrow Cluny lace edge, and are priced at $16.50 a dozen.

A tea cloth of fine damask a yard and a quarter square is sketched on the left. Two woven satin bands and a band in a fleur-de-lis design form the border, and in each corner is a full-blown rose. The price of $10.50 includes one dozen napkins.

BEAUTIFULLY WOVEN DINNER CLOTH

The choice of dinner cloths must depend largely upon the individual taste and also upon the shape of the table. A beautiful satin damask cloth with a scalloped edge designed for a round table is illustrated in the upper right-hand corner. As in all the new cloths, the centerpiece is woven in the damask, and this particular design of ivy is exceptionally lovely. A graceful design of morning-glories completes the pattern of the whole cloth. For a fifty-four-inch table the cloth should be two and a quarter yards in diameter. Price, $15. A cloth two and a half yards in diameter is sold for $18. No marking is needed on the cloth, but should any be desired, the monogram could be placed on two sides of the cloth, possibly on the inner satin band. The napkins to match are twenty-six inches square and cost $22.50 a dozen. The illustration below shows the center of the napkin; it is here that the monogram should be placed.

THE YOUNGER GENERATION

THE remaining days of school are numbered, and in these last few weeks the summer wardrobes of the littlest children must be completed, and the clothes for the girl who is soon to return from boarding school must be carefully planned.

TAILORING THE YOUNG GIRL

At the left of the upper group is sketched a smartly tailored suit of navy blue serge. Bands of black satin, braided in soutache, edge the cuffs and outline the vest which ends under the patent leather belt at a normal waistline. This vest is trimmed with soutache in military effect, and the same form of trimming runs up the front of the skirt to give the effect of a full-length panel. This model, developed in brown tussor, would be excellent for traveling.

A charming summer costume for a young girl is shown in the lower right-hand corner. It is of rose-colored ratine; the three-quarter length coat has a panel in back and is single-breasted in front. The wide collar, which is deeply notched in the center-back, has an overlay collar of white eyelet embroidery, with which the deep cuffs are also finished. The skirt is designed with four gores, the front and back in panel effect, and the side ones banded at the bottom. The model is especially

The present French modes are affecting the simplicity of the apron tunic

A regard for detail in dress is quite as necessary for little people as for big, for often the choice of collar, cuffs or belt will make or mar a frock. A plain dress of natural-colored linen becomes unusual when the collar, cuffs and belt are made of daintily colored cretonne, and an old-fashioned brown holland is rendered attractive if embroidered with a cross-stitch design in bright shades. A Puritan collar of white linen, fastened with a white cord and tassels, is an effective finish to a simple dress of blue serge.

Knickerbockers or bloomers to match the blue serge school dress are necessary for the gymnasium during the winter and it is an excellent plan to copy this fashion for the summer wash dresses. The bloomers are made of the same material as the frock and the children find them more comfortable than the white and flannel petticoats, and really look more graceful in them.

Misses' Clothes (from 12 to 16 years, or 32 to 34 bust). Whole suit, gown or long coat, $3.00; any part of costume, $1.50.

Children's Clothes (up to 10 years). Whole dress or long coat, $1.00; guimpe, blouse or skirt, 50 cents.

Boys' blouse or knickerbockers, 50 cents.

The simple designing of this dress makes it a splendid model for white serge or tub fabrics adapted for linen or pongee, and the length of the coat makes it suitable to wear as a separate coat with lingerie frocks. A natural-colored leghorn, faced in rose chiffon and trimmed with rose-colored ostrich pompons, has been designed to wear with it.

An excellent model for the white serge frock, always included in the summer outfit, is illustrated opposite. The waist closes in front in a diagonal line with buttons and loops of white silk crochet. The closing line continues down one side of the skirt and the belt is caught with a rosette of white satin ribbon. The long, tight-fitting sleeves are finished with a deep row of crochet buttons which are also displayed across the top of the skirt panel in back. A broad flat leghorn with a trimming of a single band would be a fitting hat to wear with this frock.

A fetching little frock of white crêpe voile with touches of embroidery is displayed in the sketch at the right of the upper group. The model is one of extreme simplicity fashioned in the apron tunic affected in the present French modes. Embroidery trims the sleeves and waist-front and a wide embroidered belt is run low through slits in the skirt and neck, and the sleeves are narrowly banded in Saxe-blue satin. The edge of the skirt tunic is outlined with crochet ball fringe hanging over the narrow under-flounce.

PRACTICAL FOR SEASHORE WEAR

For the boy's seaside vacation was designed the smart nautical costume shown in the middle illustration. The regulation middie blouse of white linen has a sailor collar and cuffs of navy blue serge striped in white braid, and a black silk tie caught with white sailors' cord. The short knickerbockers are also made of the blue serge.

When planning the children's seaside wardrobe it is well to include frocks of French flannel made up on semi-tailored lines, for in the early days of summer children require more protection than that afforded by the linen and cotton tub fabrics. French flannel is non-shrinkable and launders perfectly. Frocks made up in pretty shades of blues and blue-grays, plain or with hair-line stripes of white, are remarkably serviceable. A pretty model in gray, striped finely in white, is with a double-breasted, coat-blouse closing down the front and held in with a patent leather belt. The skirt of the blouse falls half way down the short skirt of the dress. The neck and elbow-length sleeves are finished with lay-over collar and turn-back cuffs of heavy eyelet-embroidered linen. A soft tie of red silk adds a touch of color at the neck.

White cotton voile is being used extensively in children's clothes this season. This material is soft, does not muss and lose its freshness like starched fabric, and launders well. A charming, one-piece frock in white voile is hung from the shoulders and is unconfined at the waist. The cut-out, round neck is finished with a band of embroidery worked in Copenhagen-blue, and a round tucker of fine net. The sleeves, cut in kimono fashion, are edged with the embroidered bands and plaited net ruffles and the side fullness of the waist is drawn into embroidered bands high under the arms with unusual effect. An embroidered band widely borders the short, scant skirt.

MILLINERY AND ACCESSORIES

The picturesque lines affected in millinery this season are nowhere more charming than in the modes for children. Little lingerie Dutch bonnets have soft crowns of allover embroidery that fit snugly on the head with turnback points over the ears.

Mushroom brims with bowl-shaped crowns are equally becoming and are often trimmed with wide bands of shirred or puffed silk encircling the crown and finished at the side with a chou, odd little silk flowers or small fruits in clusters or stalks.

The length of this coat would allow of its being worn as a separate wrap with light frocks

NEW LIFE TO THE WATTEAU MODE

On this pastel shaded gown the pannier is hardly more than a looped-up drape

ON a favorite shopping thoroughfare in London lives one of our most popular couturières, an artist who has learned the art of making women beautiful, not by the drastic and striking methods of some French couturières, but through the essentially feminine medium of daintiness. From each of her delicate, fanciful creations breathes an atmosphere of France of the days of bergers and bergerettes. Watteau himself might have designed them. One day when I remarked to Madame Loyse how like her dainty creations were to Dresden china figurines she exclaimed:

"Madame has noticed. It is so. Our dresses are inspired by the delicate little china shepherdesses with their flower-sprinkled gowns veiled with folds of chiffon and lace."

And when I asked the question her models provoke, "Are we going to wear petticoats again?" she vanished into an enormous cupboard and came out with a slimsy robe over her arm.

"Would Madame be horrified if I told her this slim little dress has three petticoats?"

"Not horrified but incredulous," I smiled.

"But it is true. What we call petticoats this season are made of fine chiffon, and so enchantingly trimmed. It is a pleasure this year to design and make the little frocks to wear over them. They are again the dainty, feminine things they ought to be."

THE FROCK OF MANY PETTICOATS

This model with the three petticoats is pictured to the left at the bottom of the page. The innermost petticoat is made of the very finest lawn and the hem is embroidered in a pattern of roses in fine white thread. It measures only a yard and a half around the hem, but at the right side a little fan of plaits opens out as the wearer moves. Over this petticoat is another made of the finest pale mauve chiffon. The edge is trimmed with a cobwebby Mechlin lace and a tiny silver ribbon outlines the pattern of the lace. Then comes petticoat number three, fashioned of the same texture of chiffon as the mauve, this time in a shade like the inside of a wild rose petal. Only the right side of the petticoats show, and here they are beautifully trimmed. There is a narrow hemming of fine Mechlin lace and above this, a line of pale blue ribbon on which lies a tiny ruche of pale lavender ribbon. Sprinkled over the lace are single roses, each pink silken petal no larger than a fly's wing. Above the lace, as if hovering over the roses, is poised a butterfly of quilted satin ribbon in shades of pale mauve, pink and blue, the wings are outlined in silver with black velvet ribbons forming the antennae.

The dress itself is made of very soft, pale pink chiffon taffeta slashed up the right side to show the trio of little petticoats, which shade exquisitely one into the other. On the slashed skirt is a rosette of soft, pink ribbon, from which fall a couple of long ends which are hemmed in a novel fashion with tiny pink roses and forget-me-nots. The crossed tunic made of pink chiffon, sewn all over with tiny silk balls, gives the popular pannier effect. It is edged with a band of fine Mechlin lace, above which is laid a narrow band of blue satin. On the lace is a wreath composed of deep petunia-pink roses, forget-me-nots, mauve pansies and lime-green satin leaves, that encircles the whole tunic. The wide waist-band is of deep petunia pink and pale blue.

BLENDING OF PASTEL SHADES

Another of these "Dresden china" dresses which shows the graceful possibilities of the modern pannier is sketched in the upper corner. It is a wonderful blending of duck's-egg-blue, shell-pink and lilac. The first petticoat is made of pale pink ninon with a wide border of Limerick lace, the borders of which are outlined with pale blue ribbon. The lace is arranged in medallions, on each of which is a pale blue bow, and sprinkled about are clusters of tiny, pale pink velvet berries. The second veiling is pink chiffon hemmed with silver lace and a tiny ruche of lilac satin ribbon. Then comes a tunic of pink chiffon bound with pale blue satin ribbon. This falls to the hem of the dress in long points, weighted by bouquets of tiny pink roses, violets and forget-me-nots.

Above this is draped the pannier of mauve chiffon, looped up at the sides with wide, turquoise-blue ribbon. It falls to the ground at the back, where it is knotted to form a narrow train. The bodice is made of palest duck's-egg-blue chiffon, veiled in pink, hemmed with blue satin. The pink chiffon is sewed with crystal beads, and the sleeves are bordered with a mauve ruching. On the front of the bodice is a medallion of white net embroidered with a bouquet of tiny flowers in pale pink, and crystal and gold beads with pearl centers.

A FLOWER GOWN

Madame Izod, another well-known dressmaker, who has just returned from Paris, gives the verdict of "Loops everywhere." Draperies, she says, are seen on every side, yet so graceful that they give no extra width to the figure. If the dress is to proclaim the new fashions, there must be somewhere a draping of chiffon, a looped ribbon sash or a band of ribbon festooned across the front of the dress. Everything is much trimmed, and the little bits and bows of lace and trails of miniature flowers give their wearers the air of a Watteau shepherdess or court lady.

Madame Izod presents the gown sketched at the extreme right as her contribution to the rage for Dresden china prettiness. The underdress is a white taffeta printed with a blurred pattern of tiny bunches of roses, heliotrope and forget-me-nots. The pannier is a delicate shade of pale blue ninon ornamented with buttons formed of tiny clusters of the miniature flowers repeating the design on the skirt. From each floral button hangs a tassel of pale pink silk. The yoke is of tinted net, on which is sewed, in very fine wools, a design of roses, heliotrope and forget-me-nots. At the back of this dress is one long panel of black velvet ribbon, the end sewn with tiny flowers, while another panel of narrower proportions is looped through rings of the flowered taffeta.

Winthrop Ames Opens His Little Theatre with "The Pigeon" by John Galsworthy—Henry Miller Acts Superbly in "The Rainbow"

OF the three plays with which Winthrop Ames opened the season at his delightful Little Theatre, only one was of paramount interest: "The Pigeon," by England's greatest dramatist, John Galsworthy. The others, presented as a double bill at matinee performances, "The Terrible Meek," by Charles Rann Kennedy, and "The Flower of the Palace of Han," adapted into English by Mr. Kennedy from the Chinese of the thirteenth century, had far less sympathetic appeal. The last named was extremely beautiful to eye and ear, since Mr. Ames had fashioned its production after the earliest available Chinese sculpture and drawings and the flat decorative paintings of the Sung dynasty; "The Terrible Meek" had scenes of terrific power alternating with passages of amazing dullness.

"THE PIGEON"

CONCERNING Mr. Galsworthy's "fantastic comedy," there are scarcely two opinions to be culled. Before its first act had concluded, the characters of the piece, matchlessly limned by the author, and as matchlessly played by Mr. Ames's company, had overwhelmingly engaged the affections of the audience, and from that time forward its value was established. Robert Louis Stevenson expressed it aptly: "I cannot count that a poor dinner, or a poor book, where I meet with those I love." One need search no further for a suitable defense of "The Pigeon." It does not conform to rules and regulations, and should it be submitted to closest scrutiny, it would be found to have violated most of the orthodox canons of play-making. But the man who could be found to condemn it on this score must be lost indeed to consideration of that delicacy and charm and humor which may safely override convention.

THE ARGUMENT

Christopher Wellwyn, an artist of impulsive sympathies, gives alms to all who ask for such time as his resources permit; and when he has no longer anything in his pockets, he gives his card, and invites his forlorn companions to the studio where he lives with his daughter, who has long since lost patience with her father's indiscriminate charities. The comedy opens on a pretty

Laura Hope Crews as leading woman of Henry Miller's company in "The Rainbow," A. E. Thomas's successful new comedy

Lewis Waller and Grace Lane in Waller's presentation of Booth Tarkington's "Monsieur Beaucaire," in which the English actor plays the stellar rôle scene between the two, in which he promises to curb his "sickly sentimentality." The girl is no sooner off to bed, however, than a hesitant rap at the door warns Christopher that some one of his philanthropic invitations has been accepted. In sore trepidation, he admits Guinevere Megan, a flower vender, whose husband has turned her out, and who has come to the one man who till then had ever befriended her. Seeing the woman's sad straits, the artist quails at turning her into the streets again. The upshot of it is that he smuggles her into his models' room, gives her supper and his daughter's warmest bathrobe, and bids her keep quiet till morning, when she can slip away.

A second rap at the door throws Christopher into still greater agitation. This time he admits a French vagabond with a philosophic turn, with whom he had once enjoyed an hour's exhilarating conversation in a public park. Ferrand, the newcomer, is as desperately put to it for food and shelter as the flower-girl, and the last stern resolve of Christopher Wellwyn melts in pity for his sorry visitors. Concealing from Ferrand the fact of Guinevere's presence, he offers him a bit of food and drink, and shelter in an unused corner.

An uncertain knocking at the door announces another suppliant, and Christopher, with the bravery of desperation, ushers in Timson, an ex-cabman, whose failing is for intoxicants. This weakness has already overtaken him, but with such clearness as he can summon, he voices his need of food, drink and lodging. While Christopher expostulates, Timson falls into untroubled slumber on a near-by couch, and there he stays, despite the prodding of Christopher and Ferrand.

Finally the artist, seeing that there is no help for it, leaves his strange guests to make the best of their situations, and starts for bed. Instantly he is out of the way, Guinevere comes out of the model room, searching for more supper. She encounters Ferrand, and, after a flurry of fright, settles down to a chat with him, while the sleeping Timson snores on the couch. The chat merges delicately into flirtation, and ends with a kiss. But unfortunately for romance, at this point Timson tumbles from his security, wakes the household, and the daughter of Christopher Wellwyn catches her father red-handed at his ancient, foresworn trick of filling his house with mendicants.

She insists that the three be turned over to two expert handlers of such cases, a professor of sociology and a justice of the peace, who are invariably at daggers' points over the proper means of administering charity. The professional altruists wrangle warmly, but ultimately find common ground in properly disposing of Christopher's three visitors. The girl is given work, Ferrand is clothed and sent in quest of suitable employment, and Timson is left as studio assistant to Mr. Wellwyn. Then, one after another, the schemes fail. The girl is discharged from place after place, and finally follows the untamed impulses of her nature to utter degradation. Ferrand and Timson fare no better. Soon all three have tried to end their lives, and, ironically enough, have been prevented by organized society. Timson, the unfortunate, throws himself before a heavy truck, and is barely rescued by a nimble policeman. Ferrand, wandering aimlessly in open fields, contracts a fever, and tries, by lying in a marsh, to die of it. He is rescued, taken to a hospital, and there nursed back to life. Guinevere, shocked into a realization of what she has become, throws herself into the river, but is rescued by a police constable, who straightway arrests her for trying to take her own life.

Ferrand, the sardonic, sums it all up in a talk with Christopher Wellwyn. "They all want us to die," he says, "and admit that we and the world would be better for it, but they will not let us do it." He has come to know, finally, that only such men as Christopher Wellwyn can ever understand such as he, for all that the artist's uncalculating kindnesses have won him the name of "the pigeon," for any and all to pluck.

Meantime the Pigeon's daughter, exasperated beyond all bounds by her father's strange coterie, has arranged to move his studio to the seventh floor of a building in another street, where his poor cannot follow him. The plans are kept darkly secret. Christopher promises. The comedy ends with the gentle artist giving to Guinevere, Ferrand and Timson the address of his new abode, and there, presumably, they will follow him.

A HUMAN PLAY

As the action here outlined will show, the play relies largely for its strength upon the characters it portrays. Liking it is a question merely of liking the persons in it, without respect to what they do or do not do. In a confidential whisper, "The Pigeon" is really rather artificial in structure, but the process of overlaying the foundational incident with beings so warmly sympathetic and real that their like has scarcely been seen here before, would be ample atonement for twice Mr. Galsworthy's studied symmetries.

It is not possible to praise too highly Frank Reicher's impersonation of the French vagabond, or Sidney Valentine's flawless playing of Timson. Even Pamela Gaythorne, whose past work did not justify too rosy hopes, was admirable as the flower-girl. Russ Whytal and Louise Seymour were equally fine as Christopher Wellwyn and his daughter, Ann; the former, from a trained sense of the theatre, and the latter, because of a peculiar temperamental fitness for the part. The ensemble playing was remarkable. Every member of the company merited high praise. Two minor parts were excellently played by Wilfred North and Reginald Barlow, that of the Police Constable and the Humble Man.

Paul Orleneff, who brought his magnificent performance of "Ghosts" from the Bowery to Broadway

"THE TERRIBLE MEEK"

"THE Terrible Meek" is Mr. Kennedy's somewhat original treatment of the scene of the Crucifixion, rather compounded of dramatic hints and possibilities than of actual drama. The basic idea was to re-vitalize the story of the death of the Christ, and its contemporaneous effect, by having the scene between the Mother and a captain of soldiery, waiting through the night on Calvary, told in the vernacular. The Mother is an unlettered woman, bemoaning the loss of a son, of whose tremendous importance to the world she scarcely dreams.

She tells the story of his strange, miraculous life to the captain of soldiery, who, in turn, relates to her the significance he has gleaned from it. They two, in their groping, fall upon the essence of the ideal Christian doctrine, and put it into words of thrilling actuality. As they wait, prototypes of all the "terrible meek" of the world to come, the night lifts, and against the sky is silhouetted the actual scene of the Crucifixion—Christ between the two thieves.

Edith Wynne Matthison, the Mother, has a beautiful quality of voice within a certain limited register, and her diction is perhaps superior to that of any other actress in this country. But if she can reconcile herself to playing this scene, a crude, untutored woman face to face with her supreme tragedy, as if she were intoning a poetic fantasy, she surely lacks judgment. While Mr. Kennedy's object seemed to be to get as near to reality as possible, Miss Matthison was pulling steadily away from it. She is perhaps forced to reading in a monotone, because of the limitations of her voice; but there seems no excuse for her chanting a speech written designedly in illiterate and irregular English with the artificiality exacted only by polished alexandrines.

Her impersonation of the title part in "The Flower of the Palace of Han" was greatly superior. Here her poetic style was in keeping. Mr. Reicher, however, as the Chinese Prince, did himself scant credit.

This Chinese drama in five scenes, that preceded "The Terrible Meek," was also written by Mr. Charles Rann Kennedy and was characterized by the same inaction and lengthy speeches. Although the play was beautifully staged and costumed with painstaking regard for detail, it somehow lacked the required Chinese atmosphere.

"THE RAINBOW"

HENRY MILLER'S remarkable acting and a pretty ingenue actress who chanced to "arrive" because of nice adaptability to her rôle, gave "The Rainbow," by A. E. Thomas, the impetus it needed to send it to success. It is a passable little comedy, with some clever lines and one or two delicately humorous and pathetic scenes. But it is painful to think what would have been the result of its effort to please if its native strength had not been complemented by the power of a brilliant company.

Mr. Miller's acting would naturally not develop, in such a play, any heretofore hidden resources, but it does come up to the best that he has done in the past, and that is enough, and more than enough, to lift his material far above the commonplace. He is essentially an actor for plays of huge vitality and terrific mental and physical force. In "The Rainbow" he has all he can do to compel belief in his sincerity, though that he succeeds is beyond all question.

The aforesaid ingenue, Ruth Chatterton, who played with Henry Kolker in "The Great Name" earlier in the season, has youth, prettiness, and no special ability beyond being able to do as she is told. She contributes very materially, however, to the play's prosperity.

Laura Hope Crews, one of the few really gifted character comedienne on the American stage, handles a thankless rôle with compelling art. Hope Latham works wonders with one small scene.

"THE TYPHOON"

OPINIONS are bound to differ on the subject of "The Typhoon," the play, made from the Hungarian, in which Walker Whiteside is starring at the Fulton Theatre. Criticism here is entirely a matter of taste. If it irritates you in the beginning, leave at the end of the first act, because it will offer no later consolations. This is because the most important thing about the "Typhoon" is its subject-matter, which it deals with trenchantly and without gloves. If it enlists your sympathies, it thrills you in its unfolding and bewitches you with its acting; but if you fail to fall in with it, it will smite you dumb with wonder that so many hundreds of persons are enthralled by it. It tells of the conflict in a man of Japan between love of his country and love of a light woman, and the cyclonic tragedy that grows out of it. Mr. Whiteside acts with authority and fine character sense, but Florence Reed gives the finest performance in the piece.

As a present or future user of VOGUE PATTERNS it is very much to your advantage to know how these patterns are manufactured.

Armed with this knowledge, you will instantly appreciate the difference between patterns made by hand and patterns that are merely stamped out by automatic machines.

Even if VOGUE PATTERNS were produced by machinery, the efficiency of our foreign news service would make them much better worth your while than are patterns produced by those designers who lack the entrée to the leading maisons of Paris.

The first step in the manufacture of VOGUE PATTERNS is to select the models from which they are made. Every resource of the Editorial Department is used to ensure the originality and exclusiveness of these models. The latest importations from the best Paris dressmakers are carefully studied, as are the "croquis"—careful little sketches of the newest creations of Poiret, Worth, Beer, Drécoll, Callot and the other makers of the mode—which come to us regularly from VOGUE'S Paris fashion correspondents.

As soon as a gown is editorially selected for publication in pattern form, it is sent upstairs to the Head of the VOGUE Pattern Department, who personally cuts from it a model in thin muslin. This model is draped on a figure and carefully studied to see how it will satisfy discriminating American taste.

If it emerges triumphant from this inspection, the muslin model is "graded" and "punched"—twin operations that determine sizes and future working instructions. It is then laid down on tissue paper and carefully cut by hand.

As each pattern leaves the cutter's shears it is again inspected by the Head Designer before being wrapped up and mailed to its purchaser.

Notice that every operation is carried out by hand. That means much to you. There are no motors and buzz-saws in the VOGUE Pattern Room. It is absolutely different from those factories where thousands of patterns are turned out daily by automatic machinery.

You know how any article made by hand differs from the corresponding machine-made product. You can tell cut glass from pressed glass at a glance, or real lace from imitation. The touch of the human workman is the quality lacking in most factory products. The factory-made dress pattern is subject to the same law. It will not make up into a gown that looks as if made by a really great couturier.

But the pattern made in VOGUE'S workrooms, designed after the latest and smartest Paris models and cut exclusively by hand, offers you an opportunity for real individuality in your dress.

When you buy a VOGUE PATTERN it is a pattern made for you—not merely one of a thousand sold to all-comers at the stores, exactly as thread is sold over the counter, or as apples are sold out of a barrel!

The only way to know VOGUE PATTERNS is to buy one and make it up. Now that you know how we produce them, you will perhaps have an additional reason for preferring them to patterns made elsewhere.

VOGUE READY-CUT PATTERNS, made by hand in the manner described, are priced at 50 cents each. Five excellent summer models are pictured on this page, together with three attractive styles for children. You are quite safe in ordering any of these styles. The patterns are so accurately cut and fitted that there will be no waste of materials. Each pattern, moreover, is cut in three colors—the lining in brown, the trimming in green, and all other parts in straw-colored tissue. They are thus splendidly adapted for work in the home, or for the guidance of less experienced dressmakers. Even if you have never used a dress pattern, you will be as pleasantly surprised by the ease of execution which distinguishes VOGUE PATTERNS as by their good style and exclusiveness.

The directions for cutting are plainly stamped on each piece of the pattern, and there is no need of referring constantly to printed "directions." On all VOGUE PATTERNS a sleeve is stamped "sleeve," a collar "collar," etc. No time need be lost in identifying the various parts.

VOGUE CUT-TO-MEASURE PATTERNS cost from $2.50 upwards. They are made to your individual measure from the fashion illustrations that appear in VOGUE, or from your own designs. A measurement blank will be sent you on request.

Order a VOGUE PATTERN today, and you will realize the advantages of using a pattern designed from the very best Paris models and cut and finished by hand.

VOGUE LINGERIE PATTERNS

WOMEN who must confine their expenditures within certain prescribed limits often find it difficult to obtain dainty lingerie of distinctive and unusual patterns, except in the very smart shops and at prices that place this essential of the bien soignée beyond their reach.

Vogue's Lingerie Patterns are a practical and inexpensive solution of this problem. With them the woman who likes to sew and embroider, or who has an inexpensive little seamstress, may be just as dainty and distinctive in her intimate garments as more fortunate women who dress on incomes of awe-inspiring proportions.

On pages 68 and 69 of the March 15th issue a number of these patterns are shown in charming diversity of style. For the bride who wishes to assist in making her trousseau, these patterns will prove invaluable.

An effective use of taffeta puffings on a frock of the simplest lines

Unusual and practical method of joining a washable and a silk fabric

A peplum and trimming of toile de Jouy give distinction to a plain linen frock

Youthful lace frock suitable for the bridesmaid or the girl graduate

LIFTING SIMPLICITY ABOVE THE COMMONPLACE

THE French genius for combining colors and fabrics with artistic daring frequently takes a form so simple that it is within the power of the veriest amateur dressmaker to copy it, or at least to choose the salient details and apply them to a more modest frock. For instance, the second model sketched at the top of the page is marked as unusual by the way in which the underskirt is fastened to the overskirt. It is a one-piece gown of changeable pale blue and rose taffeta combined with eyelet embroidery. The piped edges of the overdress are cut into pointed scallops at the side-front opening and at the hem, where it fastens onto the embroidery underskirt with small crystal buttons which pass through real, corded buttonholes. This novel arrangement is not only smart but extremely practical, as the underskirt may be removed and cleansed. The collar and cuffs of embroidery are edged by a tiny, scant puffing of taffeta, and a narrow band of deep pansy velvet, outlining the neck of the collar, strikes a positive note in the pale blue and rose color scheme.

A GOWN WITH A PERSONALITY

The smart combining of two distinctly different linens is shown in the lower, left drawing. Plain linen, of a rather coarse, homespun weave in a lovely shade of yellow, forms the skirt, cuffs and pointed collar, and the peplum blouse and decoration on the center panel at the hem are of a chintz-patterned material called "toile de Jouy." The four-gored skirt is seamed with tan Cluny beading, and wide tan fringe trims the hem and is repeated in a narrower width on the collar. The yoke is of cream net with a tiny frill set with minute, black satin buttons. A narrow belt of taffeta circles the waist and holds at one side a satin rose in shades of tan, yellow and deep orange. This model would be equally smart in plain taffeta with figured satin or brocade, or the simple lines would permit of its being developed in a thin cotton material.

THE TAFFETA TRIMMING

With changeable taffetas, which are as soft and pliable as chiffon, one may concoct all manner of puffs and frills, such as sketched on the simple gown in the upper left-hand corner. The lightly draped overdress and the puffed sleeve are two of the newest notes in fashion. These are combined or trimmed with bands of scantily gathered puffs with corded edges. The blouse is slightly draped in the front, where a pretty jabot of lace is held in place by the coiled band of puffings. This model will lend itself to many attractive variations; the overdress may be of figured or flowered chiffon, net or voile with a plain drop and puffings of harmonizing taffeta.

PRETTY USE OF SATIN FLOWERS

In the right-hand corner is pictured a girlish party frock that would be equally charming for a wedding or, with the addition of a sheer guimpe, for graduation exercises. The three-tiered skirt of lace flouncing is made on a messaline lining of pale rose. Satin roses are not new in themselves, but the placing of these rose and pale amber flowers in the alternating scallops of the ruffles has certainly a novel air. The belt and sash of rose taffeta is knotted twice—once almost in front and again far to one side—with tiny clusters of roses thrust into the upstanding silk loops.

MODISH PETTICOATS FOR THE TROUSSEAU

The Petticoat, Once Threatened with Extinction, Has, by Cleverly Adapting Itself to the Exigencies of the New Modes, Regained Much of Its Old Prestige—How to Pack the Delicate Trousseau Lingerie

Crêpe de Chine is an ideal fabric for petticoats, for it is supple and wears and launders admirably

A pleasingly odd effect is gained by accordion-plaiting a deep ruffle of black-and-white striped silk

NO part of feminine apparel, not even the corset itself, is more important in shaping the silhouette than the petticoat. Naturally the modish slender silhouette has deprived the petticoat of many of its former charms and much of its prestige. For a time it almost completely vanished from the fashionable wardrobe, but, by taking to itself new charms and conforming absolutely to the rulings of the mode, it has managed finally to reinstate itself. It has, however, undergone an entire change of materials; now the proper silk petticoat for ordinary wear is made of messaline, crêpe de Chine, jersey or Italian silk; if taffeta is used at all, it must be of the softest, chiffon quality. Crêpe de Chine is perserted under a tuck, another band of corresponding width, made of contrasting pompadour brocade, and below this, under another tuck, a plain band and fringe of the same depth are sewed. These bands are all bias, and so give a rippling sweep around the feet, yet cling modishly.

ACCORDION PLAITING IS FAVORED

Accordion plaiting in a multitude of fanciful forms is very popular for the new petticoats. Sometimes it is made of bias striped materials, and sometimes a design is impressed directly on the accordion plaiting. Frequently the plain material is overlaid with straight bands of narrow lace insertion or ribbon before haps the ideal fabric for the present-day skirt, for it admits of pleasing decoration, wears admirably and launders to perfection. A charming, close-fitting model of crêpe de Chine is made up in such practical colors as emerald green, king's blue, purple, reseda and brown and finished with a three-inch, self knife-plaiting. A deep band of black, figured net is set on at the knee under a narrow band of black lace insertion, which is also applied at the loose lower edge of the straight band as a heading to a fall of black, tape fringe which overhangs the knife-plaiting and plays out with every motion of the wearer.

In fact, fringe is the dominant trimming for petticoats this season. Some varieties, with their latticed tops, are so deep that there is no need of other decoration. Sometimes several colors will be mingled in the same strip of fringe, but the three-inch width is most generally used. The inch width is applied frequently to deep scallops on foot-bands or on overlapping, petal-like sections, that disclose at every step the hem knife-plaiting of bias black-and-white pékiné.

The merit of fringe is not only its decorative beauty, but it adds weight to the light, flimsy materials that must now be used for petticoats.

An excellent messaline model which will be made to order to match any color has an accordion-plaited, self-ruffle set on at the knee. Three inches below this there is in-

THE SMALL WEDDING PRESENT

From a Philadelphia Shop Come
These Unusual Bridal Gifts,
Moderate Both in Size and Price

BUYING wedding presents is always a more or less difficult task, no matter how much money one has to spend, because it seems so hard to get away from the usual thing, and when the gift must be moderate in price the inexpensive things generally look their cheapness. It is, therefore, a joy to find a place where one may buy, for ten dollars or less, quaint and charming little gifts, each one personally selected and bearing the stamp of the excellent taste of the owner of this specialty shop.

The old-fashioned spoon-holder is coming into favor again, but in a new form—this time as a little, flat tray edged by a decorative rim of silver. For $8.75 may be bought a charming style, such as shown at the bottom of the illustration—an oval mahogany base resting on four ball feet of silver, with a silver rim pierced in a conventional English design.

BEDROOM NOVELTIES

An imported article that will prove indispensable for the breakfast tray is a little jug of Sheffield plate for hot water or hot milk. This tiny pitcher on the left, holding just two cups, is faithfully fashioned after the famous milk cans of the Isle of Guernsey, England, and shows, in miniature, the same generous curves and stout structure. It has also a quaintly shaped, wicker-covered handle. Price, $3.75.

Another English importation is a little glass water-bottle and beaker for the guest room. The prettily shaped bottle shown on the right is engraved with a design of wild asters and has a sterling-silver rim at the mouth. The tumbler, engraved with a similar design, just fits the neck of the bottle, after the manner of the South American "bottellon." This unusual gift may be bought for $2.75.

BUDDHA TREE COALPORT CHINA

A really charming set of three pieces for the afternoon tea table comes in Coalport china for $5.50. This exquisitely fine china, which has been made at the Coalport factory in England ever since 1800, is a delight to all china lovers. The tea set illustrated at the top of the cut is the Doric Indian Buddha tree pattern, and in the quaint stiffness and bright vegetable coloring of its old Buddha trees and flowers it greatly resembles the chintz hangings and old prints one sees in English country houses.

Afternoon tea cups of Coalport, noteworthy for their attractive inside decoration, may be bought for $16 a dozen. The cups are low and broad, with a flaring, fluted edge, and they have deep, old-fashioned saucers. An excellent idea is the so-called "reception" cup—a round, bowl-shaped model, which rests far to the side of the saucer in order to give room for a sandwich or a tea cake, and is ingeniously held in place by a raised rim. Price, $18.50 a dozen.

A RELIC OF RUSSIAN GRANDEUR

A wedding present that would carry distinction wherever it went is a copy of an old Russian door bell such as is still used by old Russian families. The bell itself, made of brass, has a beaten design running around both base and top. It projects some five inches from the wall, and is supported by a heavy open-work bracket of brass, which is directly fastened to the wall by carved brass studs. Depending from a projecting arm of this bracket is a long, hand-wrought chain, ending in a carved brass ring by which one sounds the bell. Remarkable for its purely decorative quality, this bell would be both quaint and striking placed by the door of a country house. Price, $7.

A COLONIAL CLOCK

Very attractive is a little eight-day clock of smooth, dull-finished mahogany in a Colonial design. The open face, three-and-one-half inches in diameter, has a mahogany rim around the bevel and rests on a broad, generously curved base simply inlaid in a marquetry pattern. It would be an admirable finish to an old-fashioned dresser. Price, $9.

FAVORS FOR THE BRIDAL DINNER

A diminutive bridal party, consisting of a Dresden china bride and six bridesmaids that stand nine inches high, makes a lovely place favor. The bodies and bouquets are of the porcelain, and the gowns are of soft, trailing satin. The bride, of course, wears white with orange blossoms in her hair and an enveloping tulle veil. The bridesmaids are attired in pale pink, blue or lemon-colored dresses and great picture hats topped by plumes to match. The bouquets also match the gowns; those in blue carry forget-me-nots, those in yellow, brides' roses, and so on. A sash of gauze ribbon finishes the line of satin and porcelain at the waist, and the gauze ribbon is festooned around the bouquets.

A clever jeweler, who has had a limited number of these little figures especially designed in his own workrooms, sells them for $50 for a set of seven. The bridesmaids may be bought with gowns all the same color, three of two colors, or two of each color, as desired. With a guest card hung by a colored ribbon over each arm, they could be used as place markers as well as favors.

These gowns, and others as distinctive, will be found in the Costume Salons at Wanamakers.

of deep tan Milanese lace. The top of each little frill was run with blue, baby ribbon; another petticoat was of blue ninon run with pink ribbons, while still another, of sky-blue ninon, was made with two deep, knife-kilted, chiffon frills trimmed with fine, string-colored lace.

MANY BLOUSES ON ONE MODEL

There were many pretty blouses all made in the same design, but in different colors. The underbodice of plain, slightly fullered ninon was trimmed with a band of fine Mechlin lace, on each side of which was run a self-colored satin ribbon, which was tied in two little butterfly bows in front. The whole of this underblouse was covered by ninon of the same shade, hand-run with fine, close tucks. Then there were several cream ninon blouses treated in this way and with the underbodice run with contrasting ribbons. One of the prettiest was made of navy blue ninon run with white satin ribbons on white lace.

FOR FORMAL OCCASIONS

Among the evening gowns was one of black satin veiled by a tunic of rich Venise point lace. The tunic fell only about twelve inches below the waist-line at the front, but touched the ground at the sides and back. The bodice consisted of a lace mounting over black chiffon, which produces a very beautiful and uncommon grayish effect. A wide, black velvet belt fastened under three old paste buttons, and there was a tiny vest of the palest pink tulle. A sunflower of black velvet with a brilliant center of orange wool was tucked into the belt.

Another evening dress was fashioned of shell-pink satin over which was a mounting of ninon of the same shade. This was gathered down the front to form a panel and caught at the hem by a large ornament of black tulle embroidered with aluminum thread and paste; a similar ornament held the soft folds on the bodice. The tunic was outlined with a band of paste stones, which also edged the waist, sleeves and the fish-tail train, formed of ninon alone, which falls away from the dress as the wearer moves about. The baby bodice had a deep collar formed of an exquisite trim-

the plaiting is done, and this produces the most charming effect. Wide, fine laces take the accordion plaiting extremely well, but the heavier, coarser lace bandings are usually laid flat and are sometimes put on at knee height with a lower finish of cotton ball fringe, or occasionally with flapping Van Dyck points. On an evening petticoat of white crêpe de Chine, a flat sunflower with pointed petals of blue silk centered with a lace cabochon was placed on a lace band at the height of the left knee. Another charming French conception was developed in accordion-plaited white chiffon cloth, decorated with a delicate spraying garland and a great, dangling bunch of pink chiffon roses and pale green leaves. This is illustrated below the rest robe.

These chiffon and silk roses are being used on almost all the evening petticoats of silk, Habutai, crêpe de Chine, jersey, chiffon-cloth or marquisette. They appear in the form of bands, wreaths or bunches; they bridge spaces between panels of lace trimming or garland the top of a ruffle. A dainty petticoat of pale shrimp-pink crêpe de Chine trimmed with Lierre lace and Marie Antoinette roses, such as that shown in the upper left-hand corner of page 55, forms a most picturesque foundation for the grande toilette.

Now that skirts are being deeply slashed to reveal the petticoat, this garment has assumed new dignity. The petticoat especially designed to wear with the slashed skirts is cut shorter in front, made to knee length of crêpe de Chine or jersey, and lengthened with an accordion plaiting of shadow Alençon or white Chantilly, edged with ball fringe and festooned with tiny, chiffon roses. One of these new models is shown in the upper right-hand corner of page 55.

ECCENTRICITY OF OUTLINE

The fashion of cutting these skeleton skirts in deep scallops, such as are shown in the model below that just described, offers an element of novelty which commends itself for the everyday skirt, but is rather out of place for evening gowns. Two or three narrow, self knife-plaitings set on in curves a breadth apart or narrow, black lace insertion and edging on scant, inch-wide ruffles, afford the smartest possible result. Flat, box-plaited ruches of changeable taffeta made of the straight, fringed widths give delightful color variety. Pékiné satin, in the familiar black and white, trimmed with puffings of black chiffon over white satin, and finished with stiff pump bows of white satin, above an accordion-plaiting of the striped material, makes a smart and useful petticoat. This is illustrated above the sachet bags on page 55.

DAINTY WASHABLE PETTICOATS

Adjectives falter before these marvelous results of the needle, and one shrinks from the thought of the tub for such exquisite bits of finery as are the new hand-made and hand-embroidered washable skirts with their insets of lace, their ribbon-run beadings, their godets of allover, their motifs and bandings, hemstitchings and encrustings. The close-fitting French skirts of nainsook, fine cambric or batiste are now minus ruffles. A practical "skeleton" style has for trimming only scalloping which runs up in an overlapping effect as high as six inches on the gores. If ruffles are used at all it is usually only one deep Spanish flounce, applied most scantily with entredeux or insertion, and the skirt is cut away underneath. This flounce may be trimmed ad libitum with Cluny, Valenciennes or baby Irish, set on in bandings or curves, flapping Van Dycks or bias rows. Ribbons and flowers are used so extravagantly that the services of a competent maid are required to restore such embellishments after laundering. Last year's fad of using black velvet ribbons has lost favor, and the conventional colors have been restored. Wide ribbons drawn through buttonholed slits in the deep flounce of the trimmed tub skirts is a clever device for obviating the flare, but it proves a menace to French heels in walking. Where a petticoat for warmth is required, embroidered underskirts of white or colored albatross are approved. Rip-plette, which requires no ironing, makes excellent skirts for traveling or walking.

This season the princess slips are made of crêpe de Chine as well as of China silk, and in line and decoration follow the fashion of the petticoats. The extremely open-work patterns of lace and embroidery now so much used on dresses, require this fitted undergarment with no break at the waist-line. It is well, in planning the summer wardrobe, to provide for two of these slips to wear under muslin gowns. They may be simple or fancy; the fit is the main thing. In the Paris shops one can get such well-cut ones, all made by hand and embroidered at the neck and the edge of the skirt with scallops and dots, for about $4.50. However, they can be copied at home. The bodice portion is very long, extending well down on the hips. It fits well, but not tightly, and buttons up the back under a flap. The skirt portion is a deep, set-on flounce, finished with good machine scalloping if hand-work is impossible. With two of these one can have one always fresh, and thin dresses will look better than ever before with so smooth an underdress.

Anything so exquisite as lingerie must be daintily packed for the going-away trunks, and later in bureau drawers and chests.

PACKING THE LINGERIE

A pretty device for keeping several pieces in separate, neat little piles and preventing their being mussed is a "Trousseau Tie"—a long ribbon which binds the several pieces and fastens conveniently and prettily under a buckle of ribbed silk embroidered to match the ribbon in forget-me-nots or roses. Price, $1 each, $5 a half-dozen; or embroidered with special initial, $1.50 each and $8 a half-dozen.

To freshen and sweeten the drawers special bride sachets have been designed. Three little linen bags, with a violet design and scented with fresh-smelling violets, come in a pretty gift box with a hand-painted gift card—an appropriate small gift for the bride. A box of three costs 75 cents, and a box of two, 50 cents.

UNIVERSAL

The acknowledged superiority of the "Universal" over all others is due to its patented valve and pumping process which circulates from six to ten times more water than any other percolator

Its patented filter cup cover evenly distributes the water over all the coffee and extracts a greater amount of coffee essence or strength from each grain.

Percolation is completed before the boiling point is reached thus eliminating the evil effects and unpleasant taste of boiled coffee.

The "Universal" makes a more delicious, aromatic beverage at a minimum expense and in less time than any other percolator. Saves its cost many times over.

MADE-TO-ORDER MOTOR CARS

SPECIAL requirements or individual preferences may make advisable a body that has no counterpart in the stock models of any of the motor car manufacturers. While such a body may be considered "freakish" by some, this is merely because its design is somewhat unusual. This, however, cannot be considered sufficient reason for dispensing with utilitarian advantages superior to those of the generally accepted design. On the other hand, a special body design will meet the requirements of only a limited number of buyers; if it did, it would soon cease to be a special model, and would, instead, be found in stock types. Consequently, special bodies are of interest to most motorists merely as an indication of the possibilities open to them for carrying out their own ideas and filling their special needs.

PROVIDING FOR EXTRA PASSENGERS

Last month Vogue presented a car designed to the order of a New York woman who desired a distinctive vehicle, available in all kinds of weather for shopping and social duties. The one commodious seat inside the closed body would accommodate two or three passengers, while the chauffeur and footman sat in the driver's seat at the front. The special body shown in the lower corner serves an entirely different purpose. It was designed to meet the needs of an owner who occasionally drives his car himself, and who yet desires accommodation for the chauffeur and sometimes three guests. The driver's seat is enclosed, which enables him to operate the car from the inside, as in the popular electric and gasoline coupés. The top is not solid, however, but can be turned back, after the fashion of the landaulet. This is an ideal car for the woman driver, as she is enabled to operate the car from the inside, well protected from the cold and rain by the top and glass doors and front; in pleasant weather the car may be thrown open.

When the chauffeur is not operating the car, he may use the small seat placed over the left-hand running board at the rear of the "coupé" body. Such a seat is more comfortable than might appear at first glance, and is a popular type of extra accommodation found on many foreign cars. Extra passengers may be carried on the double rumble seat at the rear, although this car is intended for the casual guest rather than as a four-passenger machine. In other words, it is to be used as a two-person, convertible, enclosed runabout, with extra accommodations for three persons. The folding victoria top that may be extended over the rumble seat will serve to protect the occupants from rain or the hot sun, although it is evident that the

Special Bodies Designed to Meet Particular Needs Indicate the Varied Possibilities Open to Other Motorists

A cigar-shaped car which, because of its construction on "stream lines," offers the least possible resistance to the wind when traveling rapidly view from this seat will be less obstructed when the landaulet body forward is collapsed and the car converted into an open runabout.

THE INFLUENCE OF THE AUTOMOBILE

One would scarcely expect to find the aeroplane influencing the design of automobile bodies, but the tendency of late years has been to reduce to a minimum the resistance offered to the wind when the car travels at a rapid rate. The "cigar"-shaped car has been produced for some years as a racer, but "stream lines" are now finding their way into touring car and runabout body designs. In such a design there are but few corners or angles; all lines follow, as far as possible, a gentle sweep or curve in order to conform to the passage of the air currents.

The closed car shown here is built upon rather conservative stream-line design, and is representative of a type that is fast coming into favor, both here and abroad. The influence of the aeroplane on the construction of this special body is found in the large window or "skylight" in the roof, through which any of the mechanical birds in the vicinity may be easily viewed. This body was built to the order of an aviator, that his friends might comfortably watch the maneuvers of the bird men. It adds a third direction to the view from a closed car—rather a pleasant innovation which many motorists will in all probability wish to adopt.

WHAT IS DUE THE UPHOLSTERER

Perhaps not sufficient credit is given the upholsterer for his share in making the motor car luxuriously comfortable; many of the best modern cars are provided on the backs as well as the bottom of the seats with upholstery ten inches thick. The depth is built up entirely of the best curled hair and special springs sufficiently long to enable the occupant to accommodate himself to the side-sway of the car as well as to the vertical motion. When one remembers that the resiliency extends throughout the entire thickness of this upholstery, one will realize why the modern car is the epitome of luxury in feeling as well as in appearance.

MOTOR ACCESSORIES

A useful motor accessory is a square, firmly stuffed cushion, covered with waterproof cravenette and bound on the edges with leather. Price, $7.

An attractive traveling clock which will appeal to the motorist is placed in a rather unusual case. The clock is of the regular, well-known traveling-clock variety, quite small, but the case is of finely grained, genuine seal, fastened at the front by a clasp which slips up easily, forcing two little doors to spring back to disclose the clock. The case is lined with lavender satin and velvet, and is so charming that one really does not want to remove it. Priced at $6.50.

Many touring cars are provided with pockets on the inside of the doors. These are useful for storing flat articles and those which may be folded into a small space, but their capacity, of course, is limited. The coat rail, which is nowadays attached to the back of the front seat of nearly all touring cars, provides a hanger for robes and garments. Garments which may be injured by the dust, however, cannot be carried on this coat rail, and to provide a receptacle for such articles many ingenious coat-rail bags have been devised. The best of these are of black leather, and are held in place on the coat rail by straps. One such bag is collapsible and, when empty, measures only slightly over an inch in thickness. It may be extended, however, to accommodate articles eight inches thick, and is intended to serve as a covering for flat hats. In addition to the inside compartment, this bag is provided with three pockets on its outer face, in which handkerchiefs, veils and the like may be carried.

A two-person, convertible, enclosed runabout with extra accommodations for three persons

La Resistista CORSETS

DISTINCTLY SUPERIOR TO OTHER MAKES

LA RESISTA Corsets are fitted with the famous "SPIRABONE" stay, which is so flexible that it responds to every movement of the body.

LA RESISTA Corsets, in addition to their remarkable, comfort-giving flexibility, possess the style—the handsome, graceful lines which we associate with the fashionably-gowned woman. They give long wear, are beautifully finished and there is a size and style to fit every

The New Models

The present fashions call for extreme flexibility in corsets.
The unconfined bust, slender, graceful hip-lines and the general uncorseted effect.
That is why the new LA RESISTA models are so popular. They conform in every way to the present styles and naturally mold and form the figure to graceful lines over which the new style gowns hang with exquisite grace and symmetry.

Facts About "SPIRABONE"

"SPIRABONE" is without question a boon to every woman. It produces the most luxurious comfort—yet its resiliency ALWAYS retains the shapely lines of the corset.

Although "SPIRABONE" is as flexible as the human body—it will not rust, break, bend or turn on edge. It is the perfect corset stay. We illustrate herewith a section of "SPIRABONE." Note the compact construction—see how substantially it is made—"it's ALL in the weave."

"SPIRABONE" can only be had in our corsets. Pur-

from which one must get the most out of every frock. Another equally practical gown, No. 2040-E, page 52 in Vogue of March 1st, is black with a jetted net bodice. It is economical as to material and not difficult to make. No. 2101-E on the next page could be carried out well in such serviceable colors as green, blue or brown with a bit of gold lace under chiffon at the bodice.

THE TEA GOWN

A chiffon coat, such as is shown on page 42, may be worn at tea time, for dining at home or in the boudoir. It requires a satin underdress, important as to color but not exacting as to fit. The one we have reproduced was coral over a steel gray foundation with steel beads put on in a conventional design. One need not fear to attempt this as the pattern is the simplest thing in the world to copy, and turning back the selvage edge for two and a half or three inches gives a foundation on which to apply the beads. Three and a half yards of chiffon should make the coat.

Three yards of 36-inch satin will make the lovely peignoir in the last sketch. It is of the most delicate shell pink and is trimmed with white, pink-tipped roses. The trimming is a gathered ribbon an inch and a half wide. Under it is worn a petticoat with lace flounces.

THE TROUSSEAU LINGERIE

Underclothes, more than any other one item, eat into the trousseau money. Good bargains in simple French embroidered models such as are fully illustrated and described under Seen in the Shops of the March 1st issue are perhaps the best solution of the problem. For durable, everyday models nothing could be better and for the more diaphanous and lacy affairs, designs of simple character carried out in a good quality Valenciennes on sheer nainsook and sewn by hand would be most satisfactory. Nainsook comes in the proper weight for from 30 cents to 35 cents a yard. For nightgowns the French model shown on page 42, with its pretty pointed neck and pointed insertions about an inch wide would be extremely good. Under the yoke a ribbon, three-quarters of an inch wide, runs through eyelets. There is no yoke in the back, just a round neck finished with edging below which is a cluster of half-inch tucks. The chemise without shoulder straps is intended for evening wear. Two strips of insertion, each two inches wide, are joined so as to allow spaces through which to run the gathering ribbon.

But probably no one would care to spend even so much work as there is in this model on all the nightgowns nor to have so many on one model, so four of this kind supplemented by four or six more after the excellent pattern No. 2089-E shown on page 60 of Vogue of March 1st would be a good combination. The last model is particularly graceful and becoming and the least possible trouble to put together. The patterns being in one piece reduces the amount of sewing to the minimum. Around the neck and slashed sleeves is a lace edging and in the front an embroidery design combining eyelet and solid work. If an unpretentious floral motif is used, it will not take a regrettably long time to do.

The outlines of the new combinations are far less severe than the old ones. There is an excellent model for one consisting of corset cover and underskirt on the same page with the nightgown. The flat, smooth, line of the hips is preserved by the yoke, to which is attached a flounce slit at the sides, over an inner section, and of a flaring character without any bulkiness whatever. Especially good is the neatness of the back closing which leaves the Greek key design of lace unbroken across the bust. It is well to put small sleeves in the corset cover to serve as shields. The combinations should be worn with blouses and day-time gowns and the chemises for evening wear; or for a combination for low-neck gown pattern No. 2110-E, a corset cover and underskirt in one with drawer sections inside, would be excellent.

THE WASHABLE WRAPPERS

The bath wrapper on page 42 is cut on the most practical lines—short to escape the ground and with detachable collar and cuffs—and is made up in albatross which washes wonderfully. The collar and cuffs are made from an all-over, dotted batiste trimmed with Cluny and mounted on tape bindings so that it is very little work to tack them on again when washed separately from the wrapper. The whole garment hangs loose from the shoulders, without tucks or gathers, so that it is easy to iron. The cap is of the same material as the collar and cuffs and shows a charming arrangement of bows set at intervals around the band.

THE SEPARATE COAT

A very important garment in the spring wardrobe is a separate coat. The material for this coat, which is to serve for motoring and other rough wear, should be as rainproof as possible and light in weight: there are many woolsens that have warmth without bulk. Some new homespun and tweeds are smart and novel, and coat patterns covering every taste and style are shown on page 60 of our issue of March 15th. The various dust-color shades of tan, dark brown, gray and blue are best.

THE COST OF A TROUSSEAU

It is impossible to give an exact price for each gown and accessory, for the individual taste will cut down in one place to enlarge in another. But omitting the wedding gown, five hundred dollars generously covers the expenditure; even this might be included if one has a good dressmaker and tailor who charge set prices and to whom one can take the materials. A perfectly competent dressmaker should be found who will make a gown for $25, including findings, for there are plenty at this price, even in extravagant New York. There are also excellent tailors who will make a suit for $30. Perhaps some such rough schedule as that below might help as a guiding plan for the principal expenditures, though in so individualized a problem no great accuracy is possible.

The tailored suit should cost about $60, the waist to go with it, $15, and the suit hat, $10. A fair price to pay for the afternoon taffeta frock would be $50, and for the hat to wear with it, $15; $40 should purchase two ready-made lingerie frocks and $25 the two dimity frocks, preferably made by a dressmaker. Linen skirts should cost not more than $7 and the necessary four would then come to $28; four silk skirts would also cost about $28, and the four muslin ones could be managed for $20. The total cost of the evening gown should be about $60, that of the tea gown, $20, and the negligée, $15. Then allowing $9 for the wrapper and $25 for the separate coat, there will remain $55 for underclothes and $25 for shoes, stockings and gloves.

WHAT THEY READ

DEATH, by MAURICE MAETERLINCK, is a little treatise in which the Belgian mystic endeavors to reach some conclusion touching our final relation to the infinite in time and space. His earlier chapters are neither new nor striking in thought, but the latter half of the book is an extremely eloquent discussion of the vast subject. There seem to be a good many assumptions in M. Maeterlinck's reasoning, and at moments he is apparently inclined to give up his speculation as beyond human grasp. Annihilation after death he does not expect, but neither does he hope for continuance of the ego as we know it. His final conclusion is that the future contains for us happiness rather than the reverse. In his reasoning towards this conclusion he is led into fascinatingly eloquent speculations which sometimes rise to the sublime. (New York: Dodd, Mead & Co., $1 net.)

YANKEE FANTASIES, by PERCY MACKEYE, is a volume of one-act plays designed to show forth the romantic and poetic element in New England life. Perhaps the best of the plays is "Chuck: An Orchard Fantasy," in which the author seeks to emphasize the value of sincere native passion as compared with the hard, material virtues of respectable country folk. In this extravaganza Mr.

MacKaye has displayed his own daring fancy at its best and almost its wildest. "Gettysburg" is next in value to "Chuck," and likely to appeal to a larger audience, as being free from the wayward, anarchic protest that distinguishes the first playlet. "The Antick" is intended as a protest against the narrowing and deadening effect of long self-suppression in a rural community drained for generations of its most hopeful and energetic native stock by emigration, and unable to assimilate the immigrant come in to fill the void. The best things in "The Cat-Boat: A Fantasy for Music" is the genuinely poetic lyricism of the author's songs. "Sam Average" is a highly symbolistic expression of American democracy and patriotism, but it seems the least successful of Mr. MacKaye's attempts. (New York: Duffield & Co., $1.25 net.)

or noisy, but where a few tired, sane folk are privileged to rest in security while they listen to the humorous babble of the cleverest inmates. Lear's inspired nonsense is the natural by-product of a singularly sane and robust spirit. He is a boon to the whole English-speaking race. (New York: Duffield & Co., $2.50.)

LATER LETTERS OF EDWARD LEAR

, edited by LADY STRACHEY, is another volume of that delicious correspondence between Lear and a number of his close friends, among them Lord Carlingford and Lady Waldegrave. Scattered through the volume are beautifully reproduced plates of many pictures by Lear, besides some of his caricatures and photographs of persons and places. The portraits of Lear show the huge head with its fine, bald dome, its great, irregular nose, its vast beard, its kindly intelligent eyes and its mental alertness and strong sense. As to the letters, they reveal the author of the immortal Nonsense Books as a man of force, kindness, wisdom and delicious whimsicality. No other English letters approach these except the best of Charles Lamb, and the family likeness of the two men in their whimsical aspect is distinctly marked. Such a book as this, with its incidental biographical detail, its passing reference to matters literary and political, and its exquisitely inconsequential fun, is a blessing such as the literature of the day rarely vouchsafes. Lear's puns, his intentional misspelling, his nicknames for friends, his unconventional ease of address with all sorts of people, his keen and clear-cut criticism of public events and characters, all go to make the most delightful reading. His praise of Malta as a winter residence is characteristic: "For there is every variety of luxury, animal, mineral and vegetable—a Bishop and daughter, pease and artichokes, works in marble and filligree, red mullet, and Archdeacon, Mandarin oranges, Admirals and Generals, Marsala wine 10d. a bottle—religious processions, poodles, geraniums, balls, bacon, baboons, books and what not." (New York: Duffield & Co., $3.50 net.)

THE COMPLETE NONSENSE BOOK

, by EDWARD LEAR, is a new and full edition of a perennially delightful work. Lady Strachey of Sutton Court edits this large volume, and the Earl of Cromer contributes an introduction. In this edition are included all the original pictures and verses in the two Nonsense Books of Lear and considerable new material. The volume is a quarto of more than 400 pages in large, fully leaded type. If there are those who do not know Lear, they cannot too soon possess themselves of this delightful volume. Nothing in English literature resembles it except parts of the immortal Alice books, and Lear is far more inconsequent than Lewis Carroll. There is a discoverable philosophy and commentary upon life in Carroll, but Lear has achieved that rare thing—pure nonsense. For a world that is chronically tired of itself, its preachers and teachers, Lear offers a welcome relief. He is as soothing to overwrought nerves as a well-conducted madhouse where none of the patients are violent

LAFCADIO HEARN, by NINA H. KENNARD

, is a new and extended biography of the extraordinary man whose life and writings have excited so much interest. The author of this new attempt to place Hearn rightly before us has taken the trouble to make acquaintance with a number of his relatives, and her account of his origin and early education is remarkably full. She does not dwell upon some incidents of his life that have received far more notice than their real significance justifies, though she does not make any attempt to deny that there were irregularities of conduct, such, however, as are common to youth in all lands, and pass unchallenged in the case of undistinguished men. On the other hand, it must be said that the biographer tends to take Hearn's literary gifts and performances somewhat too seriously. He was one of those rare spirits, suffering from physical and mental sickness, which makes it impossible for them to accept ordinary human standards of conduct or to conform to social conventions. All this is abundantly illustrated by the anecdotes recorded in this book. His "genius," as the biographer rather too insistently calls his literary gift, really owed little to his physical and mental obliquity, but rather suffered from those peculiarities. As a father, however, he proved himself a normal human being. He dearly loved his children, had a strong sense of his paternal responsibility and, after his disillusionment touching Japan, desired nothing so much as that the children should be able to take their place as Caucasians in occidental society. The volume is fascinatingly interesting. (New York: D. Appleton & Co., $2.50 net.)

THE LIFE STORY OF J. PIERPONT MORGAN, by CARL HOVEY, purports to be a biography of the American financier undertaken without the latter's suggestion and solely with the wish to present him to the world as the author sees him. Mr. Hovey tells us that in the course of his investigations, undertaken with a view to getting at the essential facts and significance of the financier's life, he reached the conclusion that Mr. Morgan has been, on the whole, a beneficent influence in the life of his times. Of course, a friendly life of Mr. Morgan is, and must be, in popular estimation, what a biography of a candidate for the presidency always necessarily is—an ex parte statement. Nor is it possible for such a biographer as Mr. Hovey altogether to escape the suspicion of having undertaken his task in a courtly spirit. We can no more have an authoritative life of Pierpont Morgan at this time than of Theodore Roosevelt. It should be said for Mr. Hovey, however, that although he treats the most important controverted points in Mr. Morgan's career with what many will regard as extreme partiality, he has avoided the fulsome adulation of many such biographers. He has told a story of the greatest interest, and, within the limitations that he has set for himself, he has told it extremely well. He must know, however, that few persons will accept as trustworthy his very favorable estimate of so controverted a personality. The illustrations of the book are of considerable interest, especially the portraits of Mr. Morgan and his father. At forty Mr. Morgan's face shows a crude power that is little short of brutal. At about seventy, as he appears in the frontispiece, his countenance expresses greater refinement, and no less power, together with a singularly alert intelligence centered chiefly in piercing and illuminated eyes. (New York: Sturgis & Walton Company, $2.50 net.)

CHILE AND HER PEOPLE OF TO-DAY, by NEVIN O. WINTER, is a new volume in a series dealing with present conditions in many American and European countries. Mr. Winter, who has written the volumes in the same series upon Mexico, Cuba, Brazil, Argentina and Guatemala, seems to find our Spanish-American neighbors attractive and interesting. His book is partly descriptive, partly expository and partly historical. He is seldom severely critical, but his facts often speak most unfavorably of conditions. Poverty and a low standard of living characterize many of the Chileans. The death rate is extremely high. The upper classes rule the country, and often have great wealth and power. Mr. Winter's pictures show fewer intimate domestic scenes than one would like, but they are usually interesting and often significant. (Boston: L. C. Page & Co., $3 net.)

THE AMERICAN GOVERNMENT, by FREDERICK J. HASKIN, is not concerned with political history or theory, but with the actual detail of Federal administration. The author discusses the work of the President, of the various departments, and of many bureaus under them, legislation by Congress, the administration of dependencies, the Supreme Court and its subordinate tribunals, the prosecution of the Panama Canal, and a dozen other matters of governmental concern. The last three chapters discuss The Pan-American Union, The National Capital, and National Political Campaigns. Mr. Haskins's style is clear and entertaining. He does not pretend to criticize, but merely to describe and set forth the doings of the Federal Government. His illustrations give key to the character of this useful volume; they are mainly of government employes actually at work—of Dr. Wiley in his laboratory, of mechanics testing steel for the Panama Canal, and the like. (Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Company, $1 net.)

A MANUAL OF HERALDRY, by GALE PEDRICK, Fellow of the Royal Historical Society, is a comparatively brief treatise upon an intricate subject that may be supposed to interest the American nouveaux riches who seek to link themselves with a distinguished past and are anxious for "crests." The author thinks some acquaintance with heraldry necessary to the enjoyment of literature and architecture, though he frankly admits that the science has lost its early significance. Upon the flyleaves of the book are engraved matter taken from a "pocket heraldry" of a century ago, a remarkably brief, illustrated summary of the essentials of the science. The body of the book sets forth clearly and simply a great variety of information touching the science discussed, while the closing chapters touch upon the influence of heraldry upon poetry and art. The book is clearly printed upon rather poor paper and gaily bound in red cloth. The illustrations are without illumination. (Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Company, $1.75 net.)

NEW NOVELS FOR THE EASY CHAIR

PARADISE FARM, by KATHARINE TYNAN, is an unmitigated romance, done in high spirits. It is an idyl of rural England, with a mystery, many cross-purposes, a noble father-in-law, well in the background, and all the other things proper to fiction of its kind. In fact, this is that kind of harmless and pleasant fiction prescribed for "weary giants" and strongly disapproved by the relentless Mr. H. G. Wells. Nobody will seriously pretend that "Paradise Farm" is as significant or important as some of the things that Mr. Wells has written, but not a few may find it quite as entertaining as his somewhat fantastic early novels prophesying the civilization of the future. If you wish to read an agreeably written and entirely innocuous story in which nothing occurs to harrow the feelings of any reader, "Paradise Farm" is exactly the thing you seek.

THE WOMAN FROM WOLVERTON, by ISABEL GORDON CURTIS, is an attempt to picture with photographic realism the life of a rural Congressman's wife at Washington. We see the Shippe family transplanted from their native Wolverton, where they have lived upon a small income without servants, and amid persons as simple as themselves, to the artificial society of the National Capital. After that come the boarding-house, the social swim, the housekeeping on a larger scale than before, the homesickness amid the hollow sham of official society, and the return to Wolverton after defeat. Mrs. Curtis's book is too much a document and too little a well-wrought piece of fiction to take high rank as a novel, but it has value for its truth to the scenes it depicts, and is not without the further truth of character and feeling. (New York: The Century Company, $1.25.)

THE MYSTERY OF MARY, by G. L. H. LUTZ, is the story of a young woman who is unexpectedly introduced to the reader and the hero in a railway cut, where she suddenly appears without hat and asking the hero's aid in her escape from unnamed pursuers. As if this situation were not sufficiently unconventional, the young man of the occasion gets the young woman into one still more defiant of convention by taking her to dinner at a house where she is, of course, a total stranger. There are difficulties of costume, and the like, that the author manages to minimize, and after these adventures the mystery deepens, until it is finally unraveled and everybody that deserves it is made happy. (Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Company, $1 net.)

POLLYOOLY, by EDGAR JEPSON, is a highly romantic and extremely humorous story of London life, showing a courageous disregard of the probabilities. The child who gives name to the book is a little country girl transplanted to London, and suddenly thrown upon her own resources with a tiny brother dependent upon her exertions. How Pollyooly acts as laundress in a lawyer's lodgings, and the humorous adventures of the child and her employer are told with some of the comic verve that distinguishes Dickens. As an audacious bit of mingled humor and pathos, "Pollyooly" is likely to find its way to the hearts of persons with leisure for light fiction. The story is illustrated throughout by Hanson Booth. (Indianapolis: The Bobbs-Merrill Company, $1.25 net.)

THE LUCK OF RATHCOOLE, Mrs. JEANIE GOULD LINCOLN's new novel, is a romance of Washington's first administration, opening with his inauguration on April 30, 1789, at New York. The action takes place thereafter in the city, and now and then aboard ship. For heroine the tale has a lady of the comic theatre, known as Miss Moppet. Mrs. Lincoln's story is romantic in spirit, plot and incident. It depends for realistic effect upon the introduction of familiar scenes and persons of New York City in the late eighteenth century. (Boston and New York: Houghton-Mifflin Company, $1.20 net.)

LITERARY POTPOURRI

THE SAILOR WHO HAS SAILED AND OTHER POEMS, by BENJAMIN R. C. LOW, has recently been published. Mr. Low's verses are far above most current magazine poems and much more serious in thought and fine in feeling than any except the best poetic work in these days that is embodied in book form. These poems are idealistic and strongly symbolic, are developed in sound blank verse with no little lyric charm. The little semi-dramatic poem in blank verse, entitled "Any Young Man," has a fine spirit conveyed in a happily managed symbolism. How charming is the passage in which the youth is assured,

"That like a bird set singing in a sky,
The joy forever cometh back to thee—
Forever flieth thine."

(New York: The John Lane Company, $1.25.)

FOR HER NAMESAKE is still another anthology, this time a volume of love poems by various hands. MR. STEPHEN LANGTON, who prepared this volume in 1910, has revised and enlarged it in this edition. It is a pleasing book of the kind, both in form and matter. The American publishers are Dana, Estes & Co., of Boston.

THE GARDEN OF INDRA is a volume of East Indian tales, republished from a periodical, and written by MICHAEL WHITE, who has the reputation of knowing India as well as Mr. Kipling. The tales are varied, interesting and lively, with plenty of oriental local color and not too many puzzling Hindustani phrases. Mr. White seems at home in his chosen scenes, but it would be gross flattery to say that his style has the charm, vigor and distinction of Mr. Kipling's. (New York: Duffield & Co., $1.25 net.)

ZULEIKA DOBSON, by MAX BEERBOHM, is an extravaganza of Oxford undergraduate life. The heroine is a clever professional "entertainer," the granddaughter of a college warden. No doubt the Oxford atmosphere is well conveyed, but the unreality of the personages and passions rather spoils the story. (New York: John Lane Company, $1.30 net.)

THE WINGS OF DESIRE, by M. P. WILLCOX, is a bewilderingly over-peopled story involving a sea adventure that is over long in getting under way, and love adventures that fail to interest the reader. As chapter after chapter introduces new characters, one sighs in despair for something accomplished, though lively dialogue and effective characterization afford some relief. (New York: John Lane Company, $1.30 net.)

HOME HYGIENE AND PREVENTION OF DISEASE, by NORMAN E. DITCAN, M.D., is a volume of 340 pages, in which the subjects treated are alphabetically arranged. The author treats his subjects from the usual scientific medical point of view, though he emphasizes prevention rather than cure, and recognizes the influence of the mind upon physical health. The advice contained in the book is given in simple, non-technical language, and the author does not neglect to recommend, in all serious cases, the prompt consultation of a physician. (New York: Duffield & Co., $1.50 net.)

THE CHILDREN'S COTILLION

How to Make This Favorite Form of Entertainment for Young People an Enjoyable Success, with Suggestions for Figures and Favors

DURING the past season "the grown ups" have let the cotil-lion slip into the background, but the children prove reluctant to let go of the pretty figures and favors, and so, despite fashion, the cotillion with them is still a happy event.
The planning and preparation for a children's cotillion must, in these exacting times, be as careful and well-nigh as elaborate as that required for older people.

The style of the invitation must vary according to the kind of party. For the very youngest generation the printed cards with the little Kate Greenaway pictures at the top, purchasable at the stationers, may be used; to these cards it will be found necessary to add the word "cotillion" in the lower corner.
Or the hostess may use one of her own engraved invitation cards and simply fill out the blanks with the word "cotillion," the date and other necessary information. The usual hours for children's parties are from three to six, with refreshments served at five. For the children a formally engraved invitation, even to much larger affairs, is not expected.

THE SUCCESSFUL PARTY

It is usual to ask some one of the hostess's friends to lead the cotillion or else to engage a dancing teacher for the occasion. Much confusion will be saved if the hostess decides the children's partners for them and especial thoughtfulness should be given to bashful boys and girls, for a bashful child who receives no social help, really suffers miserably. To insure the success of the party, the hostess is often glad to have a friend receive with her and assist in presiding over the favor table, which incidentally should be sufficiently large to hold the favors for the entire dance.

The cotillion leader should remember that a child's happiness is not in conversation, but in activity. Hence in selecting and ordering the figures, every now and again one which includes all the small couples, is a relief. It is well to begin with a grand march.

A new note in cotillions is to keep it in two colors, pink and blue or pale green and white or other pastel shades.
The decorations and favors are all in the selected shades, and when the dance is a small one, one may even ask the children who are invited to bring out the same colors in their attire.

THE "PAPER BALL"

The ordinary cotillion may be varied by developing it along some one theme, such as the paper ball. The children are presented with hats of paper which they wear throughout the party. These hats are designed in many ways; there is the Priscilla bonnet, the inverted rose and other flowers, sun bonnets, Dutch bonnets, and Japanese headdresses; the boys may choose between Chinese hats with a plaited paper queue, a sailor's cap, an Indian's war bonnet or a jockey cap.

This paper motif is carried out in the floral decorations, which just at this season may be of white paper dogwood blossoms, which are bought by the hundred and fastened to natural twigs of any kind. A ceiling of dogwood is especially effective or apple blossoms of paper may be arranged in the same way. These ceilings are contrived by stringing wires the length of the room and lower than the ceiling proper; the wires are then covered with flowers and electric lights are placed
ing give sufficient brightness.

All the favors are made of paper—fans, Japanese parasols, toys, flowers, wands, masks—all of which come in many colors.

THE FAIRY TALE COTILLION

The fairy tale cotillion will appeal strongly to small guests, each of whom should come dressed as a fairy or elf, or as a character from a fairy tale.
The room is draped with a heavy quality of blue cheese cloth, and groups of tiny electric lights, arranged to form stars here and there on the night-blue sky, decorate the walls; possibly one large star of electric lights in the center of the ceiling will be needed to give sufficient light. If special lighting is too expensive, a pretty effect can be obtained by using silver paper stars, liberally scattered over the cheese cloth. If one prefers to the mystery of night the cheerfulness of the daytime, green cloth should be used to suggest the springtime. Against this background, flower effects in colored electric lights or paper are lovely.

Always some special surprise should be arranged, such as Cinderella's pumpkin, which should be suddenly rolled into the middle of the room. When the top is lifted, out steps a little green elf, who distributes a small glass slipper for pins to each little maid, and a little silk pumpkin pin cushion to each little man.

SOME OF THE FIGURES

All figures need not be favor figures, but the first following the grand march should be; this may appropriately take the form of the May-pole figure. The favors may be small baskets with handles sufficiently long to slip over the little girls' arms while dancing, or lovely, garden-basket work-bags resembling a shepherdess's hat. For the boys there are paper rose "blowers"—a never-failing source of amusement.

One May-pole only is used in this figure as a rule, but if there are a great many guests more than one will be necessary. The children are chosen by couples according to the order in which they are seated—half as many children as there are ribbons on the pole. These dance for a moment or two, either a waltz or two-step, until the signal is given to select new partners; in doing this each girl presents some boy with the "rose, blower," and the boys give the girls the dainty baskets; these all go to the May-pole, and each being given a ribbon, the pole is wound in the regular May-pole fashion. This figure is repeated until all have danced.

The scarf figure is one of the prettiest dances, especially with the new scarfs of tarlatan in rainbow colorings tufted with tiny bells. Rainbow tints are lovely for an entire dance, as they can be consistently carried out without difficulty.

In this figure every two boys take each an end of one scarf and stand the length of the scarf from each other, holding the scarf above their heads. The little girls, two and two, take hands, and bending beneath the scarf, go to the top of the line, there they separate, turn to the little boy on either side and waltz off. The scarfs are the favors for the girls and the boys receive simple scarf pins.

Even the very youngest girl likes the mirror figure; for this the girls are given favors of mirrors set in wooden frames of tarnished gilt, with twelve- or fifteen-inch handles, and the boys are presented with whisk brooms tied with college colors. Chairs, according to the number of the little girls dancing in the figure, are placed in the center of the room. The little girls sit down and the boys march behind them. The girls watch in the mirror as they pass, and each boy that goes by whom she does not want to dance with, she erases from the mirror by rubbing her handkerchief over its surface. When the right boy comes she puts down the mirror and gets up to dance with him.

A favorite figure with children is the driving figure. For this several sets of reins are provided, and each boy chooses either three or four little girls, and each girl three or four little boys, and all being harnessed with the reins they start off at a two-step measure round the room.

At a given signal the sets of "ponies" break, and boys and girls dance together for a few minutes. Or four boys may drive four girls, and starting at the same time the four couples dance quickly around the room and the winners receive jockey caps, whips, and blue ribbon rosettes. Other attractive favors are horns, dressed as ladies, with faces made of the horn's mouth-piece, or wooden hunting horns or stirrups hung from broad leather bands to hold neckties.

These are the most popular of the figures, but there are numbers of others—the "butterfly," the "windmill," the "Spanish Boston"—all governed by much the same rules.

THE "REAL PARTY"

Lemonade is almost indispensable, and should be served throughout the dance; it is best to have it in a small reception room just off the dancing room, but if one's home is so arranged that this is not possible, an alcove of lattice and ivy might be contrived in a window nook.

Serving the refreshments at small tables is better and more pleasing to the little ones than a buffet service, and the grand chain figure just before is an opportunity for a last frolic. A light menu which would go straight to the heart of any child is as follows:

- Bouillon in cups, toasted biscuits
- Diced chicken breasts in cream sauce
- Assorted sandwiches
- Ice cream in fancy forms
- Small cakes
- Snapping mottoes

For place cards use a pretty fancy candy box filled with some simple sweet, that the child can take home as a souvenir.

FOR THE HOSTESS

New and Pretty Ways of Serving the Buffet or Seated Wedding Breakfast—
What to Throw After the Bride

THE wedding breakfast is usually served at small tables, or, if this is too formal, buffet service may be substituted. For the former, menu cards may be used. Those with dainty, hand-painted designs of a bride and groom in the costumes of long ago, or with the bride's monogram wreathed with orange blossoms, done in water color, are attractive styles.

At this season one has not yet been satiated with strawberries, so they will make an excellent start for the three following menus:

MENU I

Fresh Strawberries served in a Calla Lily Lobster à la Newburg
Squabs on Toast Creamed Peas
Grape Fruit Salad Brandy Sauce
Ices Pâtisserie
Coffee Champagne

MENU II

Strawberries in Kirsch
Radishes Salted Pecans
Chicken Livers en Brochette
Tournados à la Ventadour Soufflé Potatoes Chiffonade Salad
Ices Assorted Little Cakes
Bonbons Coffee
Champagne

MENU III

Strawberries in Champagne Olives Salted Almonds
Salmon Cutlets Cucumbers
Grilled Chicken Julienne Potatoes
Water Lily Salad
Ices Little Cakes
Bonbons Coffee
Champagne

To serve strawberries in calla lilies, as suggested in the first menu, cut off the stem of the flower about an inch or an inch and a half from the blossom and remove the center stamen; then fill with fresh strawberries and lay the lily flat on the plate.

A FEW RECIPES

Tournados à la Ventadour, included in the second menu, is a novelty to many. Cut filets of beef in fine pieces and flatten slightly with a chilled and wet cutlet bat. After carefully trimming the filets, season with pepper and salt and fry with sweet oil in a sauté pan. Arrange the filets as a border on a hot dish, and on each place a very thin slice of truffle and an equally thin slice of beef marrow, which has been prepared by blanching and baking in the oven. Just before serving, fill the center of the dish with a hot purée of artichokes, well seasoned and covered with Colbert sauce.

The water lily salad named in the third menu has a very pretty appearance, and is made in the following fashion: Carefully cut the whites of hard-boiled eggs into lengthwise pieces, and slightly trim to resemble the pond lily petals; two rows of the white must be used for each flower and its center formed from the crushed yolks. It should be served on a flat glass dish, so that it may have the appearance of floating on water, and the lettuce should be arranged under eggs in lily-pad fashion. Serve with this salad an East Indian dressing, made of the yolks of two hard-boiled eggs rubbed smooth with eight tablespoonfuls of olive oil, one teaspoonful of curry powder and two tablespoonfuls of tarragon vinegar.

The wedding cake formerly served with the ice has been displaced by little fancy cakes, and the bride cake is generally considered a mere frolic for the trinkets it may contain. The wedding cake is put in boxes which are usually placed on a table near the hall door, and each guest takes a box on leaving. The wedding cake boxes in best usage now are square with beveled edges and a monogram of the last initials of the names of the bride and groom.

THE BUFFET SERVICE

For the buffet breakfast, serve either clam bouillon or iced chicken consommé, deviled mushrooms in paper cases, macédoine salad, sandwiches of creamed anchovies, of foie-gras, of rolled bread and butter with lettuce, and sandwiches à la Régence. These last are made of very small, round rolls with a piece cut from the top of each and the crumb removed from the interior; then the rolls are filled with the white meat of a roast fowl, prepared as follows: Put the meat in a bowl and chop with it two washed anchovies and a few slices of red tongue, then add chopped gherkins, amounting to one-sixth part of the whole, season with tarragon and chervil, moisten very slightly with mixed olive oil and tarragon vinegar and replace the tops. The buffet menu should also include ices, small assorted cakes, bonbons and champagne. The newest bonbons are the candied orange blossoms, but as they have little decorative value, other candies are used with them.

FLORAL DECORATIONS

Properly set for the buffet breakfast, the dining table bears only the flowers, bonbons and small cakes; the salads and other foods are served from the butler's pantry or a side table.

When the wedding breakfast is served at small tables the flowers placed on them may be used in vases that are not too tall, or in low, flat moulds. A very effective but rather expensive decoration is a shower bouquet for each table; these are not to be in any way the duplicate of the bride's bouquet. The colored blossoms have practically no stems, so that the bouquet lies almost flat on the table and the ribbons are arranged on the cloth in irregular lengths; one strip between each guest.

Another mode of decorating the little tables is with small, white Marie Antionette baskets, filled with blossoms and maidenhair fern; on the bride's table is placed an oblong wicker tray of large proportions filled with white orchids and ferns. Orange blossoms are not used in any large quantity in the dining room, because, besides the difficulty in obtaining them, their odor is too heavy to be pleasant. Many florists substitute lemon blossoms for them, as they are easier to procure.

SPEEDING THE PARTING BRIDE

Any florist will supply flower petals to toss after the departing bride. A new English idea is to cast after her tiny, silver paper horse-shoes, but for those who cling to the time-honored rice, small paper shoes, filled with rice, are to be had; these are passed to guests on large salvers after the bride has retired to make ready for her wedding journey.

THE PLACE OF THE CAST IN HOUSE DECORATION

How to Choose and Arrange Figurines, Casts, Medallions, and Plaques to Obtain the Most Artistic Result

PLASTER casts have an artistic value immensely beyond that of the ordinary reproductions of great paintings, for the beauties of the originals are far better preserved. Even the most perfect photograph of a painting will not prove as satisfying to the lover of art as the average cast of a great statue or frieze. The beautiful lines and modeling of the greatest sculpture are secured in nearly all their perfection, and the process that makes this excellence possible is so simple and inexpensive that even the poorest family can afford a cast of some great masterpiece. From fascinating copies of medals of the Italian Renaissance at twenty-five cents to a section of the marvelous Parthenon frieze at ten dollars is a wide range of subjects and prices.

WHAT CASTS NOT TO USE

As with pictures, the casts to be avoided are those that have become too popular, such as the Venus of Milo, never successful in a cast, Barye's Lion, Cupid and Psyche, the Winged Victory, and a few others. The average bust of a famous author or composer is a hideous travesty on the person it is supposed to represent, and should not be tolerated in any home where there is any feeling for beauty. With few exceptions, these busts are executed by inferior sculptors, and the plaster reproductions are often not even taken from the originals.

There is considerable difference in casts even when they are taken from the same original. Though the plaster copy often appears to be perfect, there is frequently a slight variation which, in the face of a bust or medallion, makes a great difference in the expression. And often when the cast is in a reduced size of the original, there is a divergence in detail that spoils the ensemble. Thus in the well known Narcissus from the Museum at Naples, the forefinger in the reduced plaster casts is so badly modeled, as a rule, that it mars the beauty of the whole figure.

THE BEST COLORS FOR CASTS

The most satisfactory tone for the plaster cast is ivory. The pure white is rarely pleasing for decoration as it makes an unsightly spot on the wall. The bronze finish is hardly ever successful though a few dealers are fortunate enough in getting a fairly good imitation. Imitation bronze should never be selected through a catalogue, for it is only by actual inspection that one is able to secure a satisfactory tone. One should also be most careful in selecting Tanagra figurines in what is said to be their original coloring. No dealer has as yet succeeded in getting just the correct colors for these casts. If one has seen the originals in the museums, the difference of the coloring in the imitations is quickly noted. There are two or three artists in New York who color these figurines and sell them at reasonable prices. They have carefully studied the original statuettes in the Metropolitan Museum and have imitated the coloring so skilfully that only the expert detects any variation. These fascinating little Tanagras make an effective decoration for table, mantelpiece, or book shelf. Often they are at their best when used singly, but two or three can be harmoniously grouped.

PLACING TANAGRA FIGURINES

A seated figure on a classic pedestal makes a charming ornament for a table. If the table stands against the wall the figurine may be placed with its back to the wall at an elevation of six or seven inches provided by an antique stand or box. In this way it is made the center of the composition, and the other ornaments on the table may be arranged in reference to it. As a matter of fact, few ornaments combine successfully with Tanagra figurines. In the grouping suggested for a table, one or two small bronzes and several old books with parchment or leather bindings need be the only other ornaments. A very attractive figurine is the one of a girl dancing, with her draperies held out in the manner familiarized by Loie Fuller and other "serpentine" dancers. This statuette is most effective for the drawing room table or for the top of a cabinet.

ARRANGING MEDALLIONS

The medallions from the de Medici collection, the originals of which are in the National Museum at Florence, are charming when arranged skilfully about small pictures or tucked into spaces that require some ornament of their size to balance the wall composition. They are about three and one-half inches in diameter.

DISPOSING THE LARGER CASTS

Casts should be used sparingly; one or two large copies in a room are always sufficient. If more are used, the effect of a dealer's show room is produced. The color of the cast should harmonize with that of the wall. The dealer can furnish almost any tone, ranging from white and ivory to dark brown and green, and he can change the tone of the cast if it is found to be unsatisfactory after it is hung.

Casts are only pleasing when placed against a wall-covering of a solid tint. Nothing could be in worse taste than to hang them against a wall-paper with a flower design, or to drape them, as some do, with silk. They should never be placed against silk or any fine fabric; indeed, they are at their best on plain, tinted wall-plaster, burlap or some kindred textile. A beautiful effect can be secured by inserting a large cast over a rough brick-and-mortar fireplace. Among the masterpieces of the great Italians such as Della Robbia and Donatello may be found several bas-reliefs eminently suitable for this purpose.

UNHACKNEYED CASTS TO CHOOSE

Among the large casts that may be used in this way or alone on a single wall space, is the Madonna and Child by Della Robbia. The Infant has one of its hands outstretched to bless in a most winning manner. The mother's face is remarkable for its serene loveliness. There is a cherub's head underneath. Della Robbia's Adoration from the Ricasoli Palace in Florence is another wonderful cast of goodly size. Michael

You Can Weigh

You Should Weigh

My pupils are among the most refined, intellectual women of America. They have regained health and good figures and learned how to keep well. Each has given me a few minutes a day in the privacy of her own room to following scientific, hygienic principles of health, prescribed to suit each individual's needs.

No Drugs—No Medicines

My work has grown in favor because results are quick, natural and permanent and because they are scientific and appeal to common sense.

Be Well—nothing short of well.

Radiate Health so that every one with whom you come in contact is permeated with your strong spirit, your wholesome personality—feels better in body and mind for your very presence.

Be Attractive—well groomed.

Improve Your Figure—in other words, be at your best. You wield a stronger influence for good, for education, for wholesome right living, if you are attractive and well, graceful and well poised—upright in body as well as in mind—and you are happier.

I want to help every woman to realize that her health lies, to a degree, in her own hands, and that she can reach her ideal in figure and poise.

Judge what I can do for you by what I have done for others.

I think I do not exaggerate when I say I have corrected more Chronic Ailments and built up and reduced more women during the past nine years than any ten physicians—the best physicians are my friends—their wives and daughters are my pupils.

I have

Reduced about 25,000 women from 10 to 85 lbs. I have rounded out and Increased the Weight of as many more—all this by strengthening nerves, heart, circulation, lungs and vital organs so as to regulate the assimilation of food.

Won't you join us?—we will make you and the whole world better.

I have published a free booklet showing how to stand and walk correctly, and giving other information of vital interest to women. Write for it and I will also tell you about my work. If you are perfectly well and your figure is just what you wish, you may be able to help a dear friend—at least you will help me by your interest in this great movement of health and figure through natural means.

Sit down and write to me NOW. Don't Wait—you may forget it.

I have had a wonderful experience, and I should like to tell you about it.

Nothing is more discouraging to a beautiful woman, than when looking in her mirror she suddenly discovers that her throat is no longer firm and full. She knows then that the time has come to do something to stop the ravages of Time.

It is not too late, but it would be better to remember that "one ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." However Dr. Dys' Sachets de Beauté, Crème de Beauté and the Astringent Lotion Supra, used with the proper exercises, will quickly stop the beginning looseness of skin under chin or the disfiguring double chin.

THE PLACE OF THE CAST IN HOUSE DECORATION

Angelo's Madonna and Child from the Bargello at Florence, a circular plaque, makes a beautiful decoration. Then there is the Madonna and Child by Rossellino from the South Kensington Museum in London and the Madonna and Child by Settignano from the Palazzo Panciatichi in Florence, both very beautiful and effective in the copies. The Conception by Pattocletti is a fine work that is not widely known. Dante, from the Tomb at Ravenna, is a striking and powerful study, highly effective over a library mantelpiece.

GREAT PANEL CASTS

Casts in the form of panels may be arranged happily to the side of a door or mantelpiece, or in narrow wall spaces. The two reliefs from the candelabra by Clodion look well placed either side of a door. They are very graceful figures about nine by thirty inches and appeal to almost every one.

The four famous Cherubs by Donatello from the Altar of Saint Anthony at Padua may be grouped in pairs on either side of a door or singly on the sides of two doors that face each other on opposite sides of a room. The music room makes an appropriate setting for these reliefs. Two of the cherubs sing from books, while one plays a tambourine and another cymbals. The Praying Angels by the same master are beautiful panels suitable for a bedroom. Here, too, the Morning and Night by Clodion might replace the more hackneyed plaques of Thorwaldsen. The Dancing Bacchantes, in the Louvre, is not too well known, and is a beautiful work for either music or dining room. The well known Choir Boys by Luca della Robbia, although a little insistent in their appearance in Carnegie and other libraries, have not as yet become tiresome. In a beautiful ballroom in New York a fine effect is gained by placing Della Robbia's Dancing Boys and Girls Playing Lutes at either end of the room, no other decoration is used. The originals of these are in the Museum of Santa Maria del Fiore in Florence and nearly every well known dealer in casts has copies of them in stock.

SUITING THE CAST TO THE ROOM

Among the single figures, the Victory of Pompeii, the original of which is in the Museum at Naples, is very captivating. The Monks and Nuns from the tomb of the Duke of Burgundy at Dijon make an effective mantelpiece decoration when placed in a row. The Three Slaves of Leghorn by Tocca are wonderful studies of muscular development. They may be placed in a boy's room, as boys will be intensely interested in them from an anatomical point of view. Other good casts for the boy's room are the well known Discobolus, the Boxer by Canova and the Mercury in Repose from the National Museum of Naples. The beautiful Madonna of Nuremberg is excellent for a girl's room. Hypnos or the God of Sleep is suitable for any bedroom.

For the den or smoking room a pleasing grotesquerie is the queer little Devil from Lincoln Cathedral. It may replace one of the more banal gargoyles of Notre Dame that seems to be the inevitable accompaniment of a certain kind of men's lounging room. Billikens and other kindred atrocities may well give way to those engaging little Toltec heads that have only lately been put on the market. They have a most winning and realistic smile. The originals of these tiny objects were produced in Mexico in the eleventh century by the Toltecs and are about three-quarters life size.

ON HER DRESSING TABLE

YEARS of scientific research for the purpose of making fair woman fairer has resulted in the fame of a certain English-woman's studios on two continents. Fascinating to woman as nothing else are the exquisite toilet requisites, the use of which forms part of her daily ritual. Some of the preparations were imported directly from the Far East.

Especially wonderful is an oil which is a wonderful muscle and tissue builder. The treatments given in the studio are as unusual as the preparations. The ordinary massage is not given, but instead a special muscle strapping particularly bracing and tonic to the tissues. The theory of the treatment is to build up from underneath, as it is the wasting of muscles and tissues which causes the skin to fall into lines.

MASSAGE TREATMENT AT HOME

For those who have not access to treatments at the studio, there comes a box containing all the lotions, creams and tonics with directions for their use; price, $35.

Another valuable aid to beautifying the skin is a clever device in the form of a hand vibrator. Only trained and skilled hands can give the muscle-strapping treatment, but this ingenious instrument, called a "frappé," meaning to strike, is an excellent substitute for those who treat themselves. The instrument has two adjustable attachments, one for massaging with a cream, the other for the non-greasy tonics and lotions. Price, $5.

The woman who enjoys the benefits of the treatments in New York need not forego them when she is abroad. Studios under the same management are established in Paris and London.

FOR THE BATH

Those who have struggled to obtain sufficient lather from bath soaps and found many varieties unsatisfactory will be glad to know of two new cakes. The first and more unusual goes by the well chosen name of oatmeal soap, for it is largely composed of this softening substance with the addition of a delightfully rich ingredient which makes an abundant lather. It is pale brown, large and square, and plentifully filled with oatmeal flakes. This is one of the best softening preparations for the bath water, and an excellent preservative for the skin.

The other bath soap has no special feature to lift it into prominence such as that just described, but it comes from one of our best known makers, and gives an especially rich, creamy lather. The price is ridiculously small—only 5 cents for a large, oval cake.

A fine English nail brush which will last indefinitely can be bought at a certain manicure establishment for $1.50. The bristles are the very best and the back is of solid wood. A larger size sells for $2, and both these brushes have the wooden handles which makes them extremely easy to use.

CANDY IN A DRUG STORE

YES? IF-

"Drug Store Candy" used to be a term of mild derision, but business methods have changed greatly.

No business has changed more than the modern drug store.

Long accustomed to give service in many ways in his community, accustomed to handling merchandise with care and accuracy, the druggist became the local merchant best qualified for the continent-wide distribution of Whitman's chocolates and confections.

Of course, if a druggist is content to send to his wholesale house occasionally for a few boxes of candy of uncertain age, these are naturally objects of distrust to his customers.

But he cannot get Whitman's chocolates and confections anywhere but from headquarters. They are never sold except to our authorized sales agent. They are sent direct to each agent.

Every agent has a following of Whitman's customers who buy steadily week by week, so that he keeps his stock always fresh. Should a package not sell promptly he sends it back to the factory. The first rule in selling Whitman's is never to sell a doubtful package.

There is an authorized sales agent in each community—in each neighborhood in larger places. It is usually the best, brightest, most accommodating drug store, and it shows this sign—

Ask this agent in your neighborhood to show you our new Sampler Package. It contains ten selections of sweets from ten famous Whitman packages. Price $1.00 (except in far west).

Buy from your local agent. Where we have no agency we will send the SAMPLER, postpaid, on receipt of $1.25. Write for a copy of our "List of Good Things," describing and pricing seventy sorts of sweets in sealed packages.

A R T N O T E S

NOTHING more interesting has been shown in New York this season than the etchings, recently exhibited at the Keppel galleries, of Anders Zorn, the Swedish painter and etcher. Zorn's etchings are well called epigrammatic. They are the absolutely individual expressions of a master. His nudes, such as "The Bather" and "Edo," which display a delicacy of line treatment that produces a dazzling play of sunlight on the human form, are masterly, but his portraits unquestionably mark his highest achievement. These are not the result of carefully posed and planned studies, but of inspiration, unusually keen knowledge of character, and acute observation, daringly and rapidly interpreted. Only the man whose mind is master of his hand can tell so eloquently the story of a lifetime with so simple and direct a treatment. No biographic character sketch could give one a more adequate impression of a personality than the portrait of Ernest Renan or that of himself and his wife. The same is true of his portrait etching of Queen Sophia of Sweden, Madame Simone and others. Essentially, Zorn is a painter; he calls etching his diversion, and it may be because of this that they are of so high a quality.

AMERICAN PORTRAITISTS

The first exhibition of the National Association of Portrait Painters has elicited much interest. George Luks's strikingly original portrait of Russell and Jack Burke "Hallowe'en 1911," struck the most brilliant color note of any work in the collection. This as well as his portrait of Mrs. H. E. F. were characterized by his pearly flesh tints and remarkable handling of draperies. Another painting of great importance was the portrait of Edouard Steichen by Wm. M. Chase. The interest of the other portrait shown by Mr. Chase, a full-length study of little Alice Dieudonnee, was diffused because of an over-elaboration of background and accessories, exquisitely painted though they were. There was a striking portrait of Mortimer Delano, Esq., by Earl Stetson Crawford, a delicate and spiritual portrait of a young woman painted in his most subtle manner by John W. Alexander, and De Witt Clinton's charming painting of a mother and child playing the quaint game of backgammon. Most of the other paintings have been shown before—Howard Gardiner Cushing's portrait of his wife, William Cotton's Little Princess de B., Celia Beaux's laurel-crowned young girl, Ben Ali Haggin's well known portrait of Miss Marjorie Curtis, Victor Hecht's brilliant portrait of Otis Skinner as Colonel Brideau, and many others.

MISCELLANEOUS EXHIBITIONS

As always the paintings and drawings by the "Ten American Painters" at the Montross Galleries comprised an interesting and representative collection. Particularly noteworthy was Frank W. Benson's "Sun and Shadow," shown above, as well as his drawings of geese and ducks handled in a truly Japanese manner.

At the Knoedler Galleries the exhibition of a number of interesting portraits by Arthur L. Halmi and miniatures by Harriet A. Clark attracted considerable attention. The Charles Hoffbauer studies of New York are brilliant but sensational.

Of the one-man exhibitions of the past few weeks, the paintings by Leon Dabo at the Folsom Galleries were the most inspiring. Mr. Dabo has studied and painted the Hudson in many of its varied moods—in all but its sunny moments. Sparkling sunlight seems to hold no charms for Mr. Dabo; his is the dreamy poet's love of early morning or dusky twilight full of elusive lights and shadows. His "Winter, Hudson River," a characteristic canvas though more brilliant in color than his wont, was purchased by the Boston Museum of Fine Arts.

Young Girls' and Sportswomen's Corsets

THESE new athletic corsets were originally designed for Sportswomen. They give the utmost freedom in exercising. The bust line is low, as is essential for correct and comfortable breathing. From the surf in the morning to the saddle in the afternoon and the ballroom in the evening, these corsets are indispensable to the woman who exercises. Prices $2.50 to $10.50, according to materials.

We are also the sole Philadelphia Agency for the celebrated Wade Corsets.

When buying a ready-made garment there is one positively sure way to obtain the lining that will give you the longest service, and whose quality and goodness are dependable.

Simply ask the question, "Is this a Goetz* Lining?" or look for the name on the selvage, and accept no other.

Every yard of these linings has a white line in the selvage which is your proof that the fabric is yarn-dyed. This means the yarn is dyed before weaving, which gives great strength and wonderful brilliancy to the material. Such a line cannot exist in piece-dyed goods, which are apt to be very inferior.

So when next you buy a ready-made garment remember the name Goetz and look for the white line.

Guaranteed for two seasons—but outwear the guarantee.

MUSIC NOTES

Photograph by Alice Boughton

The Fuller sisters, three attractive English girls, gave interesting programmes of English folk songs and dances

THE current musical season is practically at an end, for only a few concerts are scheduled for New York during the next month. From the middle of last October to the present time more than three hundred musical undertakings of strictly concert character have come before New Yorkers.

Of primary importance were the many symphony concerts—some one hundred and ten—given independently by the visiting Boston, London, the Theodore Thomas and the Minneapolis Symphony orchestras, and the home organizations, which include the New York, the Philharmonic, the Russian, the Volpe and the People's Symphony organizations.

The Western orchestras, of which the Chicago is easily the better of the two, attracted much favorable consideration.
Conductor Frederick Stock has shown his abilities as musical leader of the Theodore Thomas orchestra, and Emil Oberhoffer is an able musician whose labors for Minneapolis folk have borne good fruit.

One of the big undertakings of the year was the American debut of Josef Stransky, former head of the Bluthner Orchestra (Berlin), who succeeded to the post of the late Gustav Mahler.
Mr. Stransky, in serving for a season as conductor of the Philharmonic, has failed to impress as a director of highest abilities. As a consequence the playing of this oldest symphony orchestra in America has fallen somewhat from its former standard.

Abundant choral music has been provided by the New York Oratorio Society, under Frank Damrosch's direction; the MacDowell Chorus, with Kurt Schindler as conductor, and the Mendelssohn Choir of Toronto, led by A. S.

Vogt, by far the ablest director of choruses this country has had.

Among the chamber music programmes given in New York were a number of superior caliber—those by the Kneisel, the Flonzaley, the Olive Mead and the Marum String Quartets.
Concerts by Kathleen Parlow, violinist, and Ernest Consolo, pianist; Carolyn Beebe and Edouard Dethier; Isabel Hauser and Alexander Saslavsky, and the Gisela Weber Trio were welcomed by fair sized audiences.

The soloists who made their first American appearances during the season now closed were Efrem Zimbalist, a young Russian violinist who caused a sensation with his beautiful tone, perfect technique and finished art; Wilhelm Bachaus, an English-German pianist of superlative technical facility, and Miss Elena Gerhardt, a German lieder soprano.

Three other artists, never before heard in New York, who made successes, were Miss Maggie Teyte, who gave a song recital in Carnegie Hall; Miss Lucille Stevenson, a Chicago soprano soloist with the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, and Adriano Ariani, an Italian pianist of fair equipment. The return of Vladimir de Pachmann, the eccentric pianist, the appearances of Harold Bauer and Josef Lhevinne, pianists, attracted much attention. Jan Kubelik, the Bohemian violinist, also came back for an American "farewell" tour, and a young native pianist, Arthur Shattuck, saw fit to visit his own land after an absence of several years in Europe.

A TRIBUTE to the superior merits of the "Cecilian"—perfect under all weather conditions.

The Farrand Co., Detroit, Mich.

Gentlemen:—This photograph shows the Cecilian Piano in the cabin of my steam yacht "Galatea," where it has been for six years. Without a single repair, my Cecilian is as perfect in tone and mechanism as the day you installed it, after traveling almost everywhere on the Great Lakes, and being frozen in six winters through, with the "Galatea" in her slip. (Signed) E. L. FORD, Detroit, Feb. 10-'12.

Will you allow us to give you a demonstration of the beauty of tone and touch of the "Cecilian"? Your address on a postal, please. Address Department 29.

THE SILENT Waverley Electric

The Envied Woman

The Fortunate Owner of a Silent Waverley Limousine-Five

This spacious electric, seating five grown people, with full view ahead for the driver, surpasses, in style, elegance and utility, every car on the boulevard.

The low hung body, swung between the axles on full elliptic springs, rides like a cradle and makes driving as easy as with the smallest brougham.

The Waverley Company imports the upholstery fabrics and trimmings used in Waverley Electrics, thus insuring rich and exclusive designs, while a famous decorative artist, a member of the Waverley staff, has devised especial refinements of finish.

On request he will exert his skill for individual owners.

Let us send you the Waverley Town Car Book, an artistic production that illustrates the Limousine-Five in detail, as well as the Waverley Four-Passenger Brougham, equally elegant.

Shows eight other Waverley models besides, prices ranging from $3500 down to $1225.

THE SHOPS OF PARIS

This Mecca of the Trousseau Hunter Rewards Its Pilgrims with Bargains in Lingerie and Pretty Foibles

FROM one shop, well known to many Americans for its beautiful lingerie, was obtained an estimate for a trousseau which included half a dozen matched sets for 625 francs. The wedding set of elaborate embroidery with insets of real Bruges or point de Venise lace costs 225 francs alone. The middle sketch shows one of the sets for 99 francs; it is richly inset with Irish lace with the beading for the ribbon replaced by pattes of hand-embroidered daisies, under which the ribbon is slipped through long buttonholes, worked so close at each side of the flower as to be hardly noticeable. This flower-embroidered beading outlines the rounded neck and flowing sleeves of the nightgown, the neck and armholes of the chemise, and the ruffles of the drawers, in a most unique and attractive manner. Of the four remaining sets of the half dozen included in the 625 francs, one is in Broderie Anglaise at 70 francs; two sets without lace are hand-embroidered in a simple wreath and vine design and fine scallops for 61.50 francs, and the last is finely embroidered and has insets of real Valenciennes lace and lace edging. By omitting the elaborate wedding set, one could have either two additional sets or others with more embroidery and with insets of real lace.

LESS EXPENSIVE LINGERIE

At a smaller shop, with an assortment less varied but exceedingly pretty

The embroidered yoke continues down each sleeve, prettily latticed with ribbon

The ribbons are run in this set of hand-embroidered lingerie in an unusual way

Embroidered baskets hanging from lace ribbons is the motif of this lingerie negligée and dainty, one may obtain matched sets, consisting of chemise, nightgown and drawers, or nightgown and combinations, from 22.85 francs to 100 francs a set. The set for 22.85 francs is very simply embroidered in scallops and dots, but is made of sheer batiste, with a pretty monogram worked at one side of the yoke, and is quite dainty enough to suit even the most fastidious. The set for 100 francs is elaborately inset with lace, and heavily embroidered on yoke, sleeves and on the ruffles of the drawers. There are various other sets at intermediate prices, and by picking and choosing one may arrange a very charming trousseau for about 500 francs, which will include, in addition to the half-dozen matched sets, a pretty hand-embroidered kimono matinée and several hand-embroidered lingerie skirts.

FOR BOUDOIR WEAR

The matinée shown in the upper drawing is a product of this same house. It is made of sheer linen lawn, lined with pink India silk and trimmed with Cluny lace and pink satin ribbon. The hand-embroidered yoke continues in a narrow band down the short, pointed, three-quarter sleeves, which are edged with a full ruffle of Cluny lace. At the

Berthe May's Maternity Corset

In my booklet, "Her Corsets," I tell you why the Berthe May Maternity Corset is a real support. Why it insures ease and comfort, and preserves the figure. I give names of prominent physicians who prescribe it among their own families and patients. The booklet explains special adjustment features which make it possible to wear the corset before and after the maternity period, thus proving a real economy. Also hints and rules on hygiene for the maternity period.

This booklet, mailed in plain envelope, is free upon request. Write for No. 14.

All orders have my personal attention. Orders by mail are filled with absolute satisfaction because of my perfect, yet simple, measurement system. If immediate delivery is desired, measurements around Bust, Waist and Hips are needed, also height. Other special corsets for golf, tennis and singing; also for nursing mothers and young girls.

Prices from $5.00 to $18.00.

very end of the band is placed a small satin bow with a long, twisted end, which is lightly latticed upon the embroidered band. The skirt of the jacket finishes in front in a deep point outlined with Cluny insertion and edged with lace. Price, 75 francs.

The pink-lined negligée at the bottom of the page is made of the same material as the matinée, tucked by hand and prettily embroidered in a basket design with insets of Valenciennes lace in a bowknot motif. The wide embroidered sailor collar fastens in surplice fashion with a fancy rosette of satin ribbon at one side of the Empire waistline. The sleeves are attached to a lace band, which, being slipped low off the shoulder, is held in place by a lacing of pink satin ribbon. Price, 195 francs.

IN HONOR OF HYMEN

In engagement and wedding presents the French are apt to indulge to the full their love of elegance and luxury, and the rue de la Paix is always ready to satisfy these demands.

A fancy of the jewelers that would make a much appreciated gift is a brooch-bow of black velvet and rhinestones. The large bow illustrated on this page is made of velvet an inch and a half wide that is loosely tied with long ends, which are finished with dainty, lace-like edges of brilliants. The knot of velvet is covered by a slide of the stones mounted in silver. Across the under side a long bar of heavy silver is stretched, and to this the bow is lightly attached at the center and at each end in such a manner as to leave the upper loop quite free. The appearance is that of a tied bow, instead of a strong and serviceable pin. Price, 150 francs.

FOR THE COIFFURE

A pretty style of fillet like that in the illustration at the bottom of the page is made of inch-square links of heavy silver, set with rhinestones and so joined by invisible hinges as to make it quite flexible and easily adjusted. The band fastens by means of a sliding clasp, one link slipping into the other, and may be worn with or without an aigrette. Price of band, 80 francs.

In the middle of the page are shown two small silver veil pins, shaped like hair pins, with rhinestones set in the heads. Because they are practical as well as pretty they are proving tremendously popular. They cost 10 francs a set.

BAG IN SOFTEST SUÈDE

A very convenient style of shopping bag is pictured at the top of the page. It is made in a long envelope shape in two portions; the front contains a change purse, memorandum, and other small paraphernalia, and opens under the turndown envelope flap and fastens with a simple, gold clasp. The back consists of a large pocket, as long and deep as the entire bag, and quite large enough to admit of the carrying of various small packages and the pocket handkerchief. Made in heavy brown suède, lined with moire, and with short handle straps of the leather, it is smart in appearance, convenient in arrangement, and very reasonable at 40 francs.

Among other of the small novelties at this same store is the compact and useful little vanity case here shown, which, in addition to the usual mirror and powder puff, contains a small tube of lip salve. It is made of flexible gray suède and lined with moire; when closed, one half folds over the other, so that it looks quite like one of the new small change purses. Price, 5 francs.

The Women of Boston

The women of Boston are as critical in their choice of toilet preparations as in their choice of literature, art, music and the drama.

They demand the very best toilet preparations that can be made.

The most fastidious women of Boston are patrons of Mrs. MacHale's Boylston Street establishment. The same reasons that have influenced them will be of interest to you. They know that Mrs. MacHale's preparations contain the purest of ingredients, scientifically blended. There are no experimental or untried preparations on her list—each of her products must pass the test of Boston's most critical women.

Order a sample box of Hair Fluff or a pot of Primrose Balm or Cherry Blossom Rouge, and let it speak for itself. Sent postpaid on receipt of price. Or if before ordering you would rather have more information, send for "The Finishing Touch," Mrs. MacHale's delightful book on the care of the skin. It contains special rules which no woman should miss. It will be sent on request.

PRIMROSE BALM—A delicious beautifier that gives youth and charm to the complexion. Positive in action—simple and easy to apply—will not irritate the skin. The most expensive of all toilet preparations to manufacture, and the most satisfactory to use. Scientifically prepared, so that its use is hard to detect. Small pot, 50 cents. Large pot, $1.

CHERRY BLOSSOM ROUGE—An exquisite coloring. This imparts a soft, rose-like tint to the cheeks that cannot be distinguished from the natural. It is absolutely pure and harmless and cannot be washed off. It comes in two tints, for blondes and brunettes. Price 50 cents.

INDIVIDUALITY IN RINGS

present quite marked, and there is a subtle adjustment of construction, to the end that the ring may seem a part of the finger that wears it.

INSPIRED BY A SWORD OF DAMASCUS

The antique damascene work will appeal especially to those who desire a very distinctive style. The design is cut or engraved on well-tempered steel, then inlaid with gold. The process is an interesting one and dates back to the wonderful Damascus swords that were so richly encrusted with elaborate designs in this inlay of a precious on a baser metal.

For the ring on the upper right of page 24, six initials of the engaged couple were woven into a design of inlaid gold that encircled the lavender steel ring. To the casual observer the form of the letters was not at all apparent—only a delicate design of fine gold. Another idea is to use only one initial of each person, intertwined with a Celtic design that encloses a cabochon sapphire set deep in the ring. The blue of the stone harmonizes beautifully with the blue and violet of the steel, and the lines of gold make the high lights in the scheme.

All manner of exquisite combinations, in gold of different colors, can be arranged. An emerald set in a design of red-gold on a green-gold background is a charming color scheme. The great advance in the price of sapphires and emeralds this year makes these stones undeniably exclusive.

THE JUMELLE RING

A design that is extremely unique and attractive is the jumelle or twin ring. It is made in two parts held together by a secret clasp which, when released, discloses the sentiment inscribed on the concealed inner surfaces of the ring. In the fifteenth and sixteenth century these were called posy rings, because of the "poesy" couplet engraved inside.

One of the loveliest and most appealing designs for an engagement ring is that of the delicate, lace-like tracery obtained in platinum. One of the prettiest is shown to the left of the Cupid ring—a solitaire diamond surrounded by square-cut diamonds in calibre work and mounted in a high setting—the newest mode in jewelry. The head is carved on the sides with an ivy-leaf design pierced through the platinum. Two initials are woven in with the design, which is carried entirely around the ring.

These few designs suggest the infinite possibilities for individuality and beauty in the engagement ring, and show how sentiment may here be beautifully expressed.

The rings described in this article were designed by Miss Westbrook, the three in the lower part of page 24 by Reed and Barton, and the others, with the exception of the Cupid ring, by Miss Hazen.

CLARA WESTBROOK.

WHEN A FRENCH GIRL MARRIES

LINGERIE AS WORN IN FRANCE

The latest drawers are made very straight and almost as close-fitting as pantaloons; they fasten about the knees by a buttoned strap trimmed on each side with a lace frill. The perfectly straight drawers of the sketch are widened by the lace flounce. Another pretty fancy in lace is noted in another pair of drawers, the straight, narrow legs of which are finished with a nine-inch band of Malines lace woven to the size of the knee into a narrow band, which widens again to a shaped flounce three inches deep.

As the upper sketch on page 19 shows, French women wear a chemise under the corset. In case they wear the woven-silk vest so dear to American women, it is adjusted over the corset to serve as a corset cover. The corset is of fine, extremely strong silk jersey, so elastic that it gives comfortably with every motion of the body. It is stiffened only by the bones which support the lacings at the back, the hooks in front, and one wide steel on each side. Extremely practical is the wide, soft ribbon that softens and protects the upper edge, and unusually pretty are the embroidered handkerchief corners that turn over from the front. These save the corset from soiling and are easily replaced by fresh ones.

THE SECRET PURSE

With the extreme length of stockings now worn, comfort demands an extra pair of round garters in addition to the corset suspenders. The garters shown on page 18 are of rose-colored ribbon shirred over elastic and adorned with red silk roses set in green leaves. Nothing new in this, one may say! But, Mesdames, these little affairs conceal a secret pocket, long and narrow and securely clasped, into which may be slipped any money or small treasure that one does not wish to carry in the purse.

Except for tea gowns and other rest garments, few petticoats are worn. Even with the fuller skirts of the new gowns they seem useless, since nearly all dresses are provided with a foundation skirt. If a pretty fluff about the feet is desired, it is obtained by plaited gauze and lace attached to a close-fitting petticoat top of fine silk jersey.

"MARMO" The Great MATERNITY

Here is a Corset-Waist especially designed and constructed to combine comfort, safety and the retention of a smart, stylish figure for mothers during prospective motherhood—for convalescents during the convalescing period—athletic women while horseback-riding or engaged in other sports—stout women who seek to retain the lines of their figure while at rest, but whose corsets preclude comfort.

In fact, whenever stays are desirable but corsets are too unyielding, the "Marmo" Maternity is unapproachable for comfort and its conformation to prevailing styles.

Note the lacings on either side, adjustable to the requirements of the wearer. The ELASTIC-WEBBING insertion down the front and back, which yields to any extraordinary movement—the firm but gentle support which it gives the abdomen—and its manifest accord with the present style-requirements.

A CHERRY BLOSSOM WEDDING

Branches of These Lovely White Blossoms Make a Springlike Decoration and the Flower Motif May be Carried Through Trousseau and Wedding Breakfast

ONE of the largest shops in London has recently burst into bloom with myriad cherry blossoms. The windows are decked with spring gowns and hats, ribbons, laces and gauzes; all are arboresced with cherry blossoms. Silver chains with pendants of the little white flowers are slung among cascades of ninon and silk crêpes, Japanese umbrellas robbed of their gay paper covering are wreathed with the fruit-blossoms, fountains of the flowers overflow from these fragile parasols to the ground, and great branches of the fluffy blossoms deck the counters. Cherry blossoms are not only used to decorate the windows, they are the inspiration of the laces, of the embroidery on the under-linen, of the designs for baskets to hold bonbons, menu cards, serviettes, candle shades—in fact, everything to which they can be appropriately applied.

The demand for cherry-blossom weddings is the cause of this wonderful display, and the bride who desires such a wedding will find few difficulties in her path. Every part of the ceremony, from the trousseau to the wedding breakfast, has been provided for.

DECORATING WITH CHERRY BLOSSOMS

A country wedding which is to take place this spring illustrates how pretty a cherry-blossom wedding may be. The breakfast is to be served at small tables, more modish now than one long one. These are to be uncovered, and each guest will be provided with a lawn doily embroidered with cherry blossoms and bordered with lace. The table service will be in blue-and-white Japanese china, and the decorations will consist of tall Nankin china vases in their deep, glowing, tropical blue; each vase holds several sprays of the blossoms. The menu cards, the little name cards for the sandwiches, which it is the custom here to use, for we label almost all our dishes, and the paper serviettes are patterned with single blossoms picked out in silver. Little baskets made of crinkled paper, with the handles formed of silver ribbon decorated with sprays of cherry blossoms, are to be used to hold white and silver bonbons.

The trifles, creams and, in fact, all entremets, are to be piled with cream and the white of eggs whipped to a snow, and cakes are to be decorated with candied sprays of cherry blossoms, each sugared bloom of which holds a little silver sweet; the leaves are formed of silver paper.

NOVELTIES IN THE WEDDING TOILETTE

The bride's toilette shows several 1912 wedding novelties. For she is to carry a Directoire stick instead of the conventional bridal bouquet. This stick is painted white and has a silver knob handle, decorated at the top with a large cluster of white cherry flowers. The bridesmaids also carry Directoire sticks, and the sticks of each pair of bridesmaids are to be garlanded together by a spray of cherry blossoms.

The bride's dress is made, as is usual this year, with two petticoats and an overdress. It is a veritable cherry-blossom gown with a petticoat of silver gauze, inlet with silver lace. This is veiled with the finest white Valenciennes, trimmed with tiny, soft frills of lace. The overdress is of white ninon, made in pannier style. On each side of the pannier is a square motif of white ninon, mounted over satin and embroidered with a spray of cherry blossoms. The bodice is entirely embroidered with a tracery of these beautiful and most graceful blooms. The yoke consists of real Valenciennes lace, along the border green chiffon. The bodice of white satin veiled with green chiffon opens over a guimpe of fine white Mechlin lace sewn with dewdrop crystal beads. The feature of the dresses is the curious Cromwellian belt of pale green satin embroidered with sprays of cherry blossoms. These maids of honor will wear no hats, but, instead, Brittany caps painted with delicate sprays of cherry blossoms like that worn by the bride.

To rob a cherry orchard to decorate the church would be vandalism, but the wild cherry trees along the country wayside may be stripped without regret, and their blossoms are quite as lovely.

BRIDAL FAVORS

The wedding favors, of course, consist of cherry blossoms. These are not hard to make, for the flowers are made of white satin wired into the little, soft blooms we are familiar with in corsage bouquets, and the leaves are fashioned of pale green satin, wired into the correct shape. If the brides who are considering a cherry-blossom wedding desire a touch of brilliant color, the children who give away the favors outside the church door could be dressed in cherry-red ninon picture gowns with little lace caps on the right side of which are knots of shaded mauve and scarlet cherries. Here it is the fashion for the children bridesmaids to strew flowers before the bride as she comes down the church aisle, and at a cherry-blossom wedding these would be cherry flower petals cut out of silver paper or fine muslin, or else real blossoms stripped from wild cherry trees.

The path of the bride will be literally strewn with white blooms, cut out in silver paper, little silver flowers, silver horseshoes, and tiny silver slippers, all of which are now sold in the shops, and are much pleasanter and less liable to do harm than the old-time rice. Where wild cherry blossoms can be procured, the petals should be shredded and put into bowls, from which the guests can help themselves.

PLANNING FOR AUTUMN

OUR new school directory, the "Educational Guide," which was so enthusiastically received in the last VOGUE, will appear again in our next number. As a directory of the best American schools, this department cannot fail to be of service to every thoughtful parent.

More schools will be represented in the next installment of the "Educational Guide," but none are admitted till we are sure that they are worthy of your patronage. We therefore strongly recommend these schools to every parent who will be face to face with the school problem next autumn.

We ask you to write us on any subject connected with the choice of a school. We will make any investigations desired, including a careful study of any particular institution you have in mind. It is our aim to put you in touch with only those schools which you will find entirely satisfactory.

Be sure to read the "Educational Guide" in VOGUE of May Fifteenth. It will appear in the alternate issues of VOGUE throughout the summer. Please address all correspondence to the Manager, VOGUE Educational Guide, 443 Fourth Avenue, New York.

of which is sewn a garland of Honiton lace flowers, each one of which resembles a cherry blossom, and in the center of each flower is sewn a single rhinestone. The undersleeves are of the same lace, and the train is of silver tissue covered with Valenciennes lace and trimmed with a wide band of ninon mounted over dull satin embroidered with cherry-blossom sprays.

The bridal veil shows a style in wedding fashions which is now very popular, that is the use of lace instead of the ordinary veiling. This cap is shaped like the head-dresses worn by the Bretonne women in the neighborhood of Concarneau, Brittany—just a trifle of net and fine lace. Although it is not so graceful, it is certainly a more comfortable fashion than the enveloping veil. A bridal wreath made of cherry blossoms with just a knot of orange blossoms on one side, for tradition's sake, binds this cap in a full circle. From this cap a long lace veil, the corner of which is embroidered with cherry blossoms, reaches to the hem of the dress.

NEEDLEWORK from LONDON

Good Values in Neckwear and Tea Cloths —Lovely Laces and Beaded Trimmings in Favor—A Quaint English Lace Industry

THIS year promises exceptional popularity of works of fine needlecraft. Imitation laces, which grow more and more deceiving in appearance here in London, are combined with hand-made embroideries on such articles as jabots, collars, cuffs, tray cloths and tea cloths, at remarkably low prices.

The Toby frill of ample proportion is having a tremendous popularity. The frill, four, five, six or eight inches in depth, is of fine French muslin, knife-kilted and bordered with lace. With these collars are sold frills to match, which pin into the wrists of dresses or coats. Toby frills vary in price, according to the materials used, but one very fine muslin frill edged with a good imitation of Buckinghamshire lace, priced at 2s. 11½d., and a pair of cuff frills to match for the same sum, strike an average price.

Another pretty model, rather more expensive, for 18s. 9d., was made of very fine lawn, hand-tucked with the wide frill on the left side edged with hand-embroidery in a cut-out design. These frills are particularly dainty when worn with a blue serge coat and skirt.

NECKWEAR FROM LONDON

Little embroidered collars to wear with a morning waist are always in demand, and were never so inexpensive as this year. The one pictured on this page has a scalloped border and tiny wreaths of leaves entirely embroidered by hand. The muslin is a cobweb French make, and the price is only 2s. 11½d.

The jabot beside it is made of fine lawn, the right side scalloped and buttonholed in white thread with a bordering of French knots. A width of fine knife-kilting and a pointed flap, scalloped and buttonholed and covered with a fine hand-embroidery, form the left side. The price of this is 1s. 11¾d.

FOR THE TEA TABLE

The deep lace tea cloths are giving way to embroidered ones this year. The cloth with a scalloped border in the lower left-hand corner is richly embroidered in sprays of jasmine and the "old wife's" embroidery stitch, such as seen in Anglaise or Madeira. The price of this handkerchief linen cloth is 24s. 9d., while the tea cloth on the right, heavily trimmed with lace and hand-embroidered, can be procured for 19s. 4d.

USING IMITATION LACE

Lace is being much worn on evening dresses. When one considers the beauty of the Irish laces—Carrick-ma-cross with its fine floral designs applied on net, Limerick with its wonderfully fine darning and the heavy loveliness of Irish crochet—one understands how dress can be redeemed from the commonplace by the addition of a scrap of one of these lovely laces. The fact that some of the best known of the London

BIEN JOLIE

BRASSIERES AND GRECIAN-TRECO CORSETS

The suppleness and freedom expressed in the natural, corsetless figure is thoroughly exhibited in the carriage of the woman who wears the Bien Jolie Grecian-Treco Corset.

Grecian-Treco is a new knitted fabric, remarkably silky, soft and pliant in texture, yet strong and durable, retaining its shapeliness at all times and under all conditions. Almost boneless in construction, and being made of one-piece fabric over the hips, Grecian-Treco fits the form with glove-like smoothness—comparable only to the skin itself.

In various styles, $5.00, $7.50, $10.00

Well groomed women have found out that when they wear over their corsets, a Bien Jolie Brassiere, they are sure to obtain more graceful outlines and more perfect-fitting gowns.

A Bien Jolie Brassiere supports and moulds at one time, and eliminates the unsightly line that indicates the ending of the corset in front and back. Gives those beautiful harmonious lines now demanded of the woman whose figure is to be considered fashionable. Boned with rust-proof Walohn. In many styles at 50c, $1.00, $1.50, and $12.00.

LA WALOHN CORSETTE—A popular mesh brassiere, "the garment that breathes". Very popular because of its soft, light and hygienic texture. Boned with Walohn. $1.50 and $2.00.

Your dealer can supply the Bien Jolie Brassiere and Grecian-Treco Corset. If not obtainable, write us, and we will see that you are supplied by a "Bien Jolie" dealer.

NEEDLEWORK FROM LONDON

modistes are giving unusual attention to lace must be welcomed by the women who possess heirlooms or can afford to buy the new laces.

An evening gown which displayed an artistic use of lace and the soft, shaded effects achieved by the combination of woven materials with another colored lining, was recently seen at the theatre. The satin used in the foundation robe is white on the surface with a woven lining of deep Parma violet. This sheds only the very faintest glow of mauve through the snowy satin, but the faint glow is there, and shows more readily when the wearer moves. The dress is covered with a tunic of the finest, white, imitation Limerick lace, draped high in the front and caught higher still at the left side with a flowered ribbon of apple blossoms and violets made of silk gauze, and in the back the lace forms a square train. The bodice is entirely composed of the white lace. The whole dress is lightly veiled with a scant tunic of palest peach-colored chiffon, which is made into a double bib-effect on the bodice, with each bib rising to the shoulder. Just on the front of the bodice, and forming epaulettes on the shoulders, the lace pattern of darned roses is picked out with strass.

Ecru net and lace dresses will be popular for home dinners or semi-formal evening wear. Of two pretty examples of these very pretty models recently seen, one was a white net tunic embroidered with spots formed of silver beads and with the hem edged with silver bead fringe. It was priced at 52s. 6d. The other was more uncommon, for it was made of a very fine ecru, spot net in the new "two decker" skirt design. The bodice opened over a little waistcoat fastened with tiny crystal buttons that might have decorated a severe tailor-made model. The chief novelty was the narrow fichu, which was hemmed and bordered with lace and draped only on the right-hand side of the bodice. The price was 6½ guineas.

Apropos of this renewed interest in lace, there is a particularly busy and beautiful lace industry which is in active swing not many miles from London. A train journey of half an hour will bring the traveler to the gray stone cottages where the people of this Buckinghamshire village dwell. The inns are typical of the place and are called delightfully "The Lace Makers' Hotel" and "The Chair Makers' Arms."

In the gray cottages one is greeted by the busy click, click, clatter-click of bobbins, as the lace is woven on square pillows. Not only is frail yet wonderfully strong lace spun here, but fine old chairs are also built—chairs that are copied from designs that have been in these village families for several hundred years.

Several ladies have coöperated to sell the hand-made laces. Exquisite lace is sold at 9½d. a yard, jabots of lace from 1s. 3d., and narrow insertion for underwear as low as 4d. a yard. Handkerchiefs are another specialty. The old workers call them "hankies," and you can get one of the best lawn with an inch-and-a-half border of Buckinghamshire lace for 2s. 10d.

BRILLIANT BEAD TRIMMINGS

Many of the new gowns are rendered brilliant by the bright-hued bead trimmings used upon them. The design, for instance, on page 104 is composed of bands of flame-red, satin, baby ribbon, along which is sewn tiny crystal beads. The lengths of ribbon are joined together by a rose design formed of crystal beads in wonderful shades of vermilion, which sparkle like fire in the light.

The groundwork of the trimming sketched at the top of this page is woven of tarnished gold thread. On this are worked alternately patterns in steel and gold beads. The heavily massed design is formed of steel beads, while the lighter motif is composed of gold beads.

A lovely example of the fine, pastel-beaded laces which are much seen this season is shown in the lower left-hand corner of this page. The groundwork is white, and the pattern of flowers and foliage is developed in opalescent beads.

The favorite combination of black and white is reflected in the use of jet and crystal beads. The insertion sketched opposite has a fine white net background on which is worked in crystal beads a center spray of flowers, while the outside design is fashioned of crystal beads and a powdering of jet beads.

Note.—In American money, 1 guinea equals, approximately, $5.25; 1s. (shilling), 25 cents, and 1d. (penny), 2 cents.

HUPP-YEATS ELECTRIC COACH

THE electric pleasure vehicle, from a mere luxury, has become a practical necessity to the woman of social standing.

And so far as possible it should be selected with a view to enhancing her appearance, as the frame enhances the picture or the setting the gem.

Few women can look their best in the awkward, stilted, high-bodied type of coach. It belongs distinctly to the days of postilions, outriders and crinoline. And the trim, chic, dainty, modern woman looks as out of place in it as a Dresden shepherdess in a Noah's Ark

That is why the low-hung construction of the Hupp-Yeats met with such instant favor; why it is today pre-eminently the car of fashion.

It was the first departure from the coach-building traditions of the middle ages; it is a twentieth-century town car designed for twentieth-century needs. And its success is best demonstrated by the widespread attempts to copy it.

There are six models, priced from $1,750 to $5,000.

SIMPLY MADE WEDDING GIFTS

Candle Shades in Real Lace, Tray Cloths, Lingerie Pillows and Other Gifts May Be Inexpensively Made

EVERY bride welcomes the usual gifts of cut glass and silver, for they have every recommendation, but not all of us can afford such gifts as these. Something we must give that has beauty, dignity, utility and yet is inexpensive. If the bride is to go housekeeping, the problem is greatly simplified. Then the clever needlewoman can give gifts of great novelty with little expense.

CANDLE SHADES FOR THE NEW HOME

A set of real filet lace candle shades which in the shops cost at least \$6.50 apiece may be made for the most insignificant sum. These are made on wire frames, which, if not procurable in the right size, may be made to order by a wire worker who makes the foundations for floral pieces for the florist. For candelabra a small size is needed, so that the shades on separate brackets will not interfere; a frame  $2\frac{1}{2}$  inches deep, 11 inches for the larger diameter and 7 inches for the top diameter, would be about right. For single candlesticks a good size is 18 inches at the bottom, 11 at the top and 3 deep. The making of the frames will cost from 15 cents to 25 cents apiece.

The next step is to wind the entire frame with silk ribbon binding, a half an inch wide—pink or white, according to which color is to be used for the lining of the shade. A rather heavy China silk makes an excellent lining. This is sewed on the lower circumference of the frame without fullness, and the smaller size of the top will give the necessary fullness. A hem a quarter of an inch deep, turned on the outside, leaves the inside perfectly neat and will not show when the lace covering is put on. The seam of the silk should come on one of the upright wires of the frame.

Then for the lace covering come two-inch, real filet squares, in conventional design, for 18 cents apiece. These should be placed diamond fashion on a foundation of fine handkerchief linen, and the whole put on over the silk. The cover is trimmed top and bottom with a real Cluny edging, which comes at 25 cents a yard. For the next larger size of frame there is a particularly good filet medallion, in animal motifs, for 35 cents each. These are  $2\frac{3}{4}$  inches square and stretch to fit the medium frame. One in each quarter section, with an insertion between and lace at top and bottom or linen ball fringe, makes an exquisite little frame.

CRETONNE LAMP SHADES

Cretonne lamp shades, far prettier than what are offered in the shops, can be easily made at home. This makes it possible to choose the prettiest patterns and to match the bedroom furnishings. A good Empire shape measures 48 inches around the top, 60 at the bottom, 11 inches from the top to the brass ring that goes around the burner, 13 inches for the brass ring itself, and is  $10\frac{1}{2}$  inches high. It is, of course, less work to make one in cretonne than in lace, as there need be no lining, but the wire frame must be bound as described. The easiest way to get a neat frame is to bring the edges of the material over onto the outside. This, of course, necessitates a small slit where the four upright wires join top and bottom. A fancy cotton or linen guimp with a tiny picot or fringed edge is used as a finish; this covers the raw edges of the material. It is best to select a chintz with a light background, either white or pale cream, and one should beware of large patterns that exceed the depth of the shade. Care must be given also to the piecing of the material so as to join the designs. A layer of fine cream Brussels net laid over the cretonne or chintz softens the pattern in a manner that is lovely, especially when the lamp is lit.

MAKING A TABLE COVER

There are many ways of making lovely tea cloths or sets of a centerpiece and doilies. A tea cloth with a perfectly plain center of a square of very fine Irish linen costing about $2 a yard is simple to make. Real lace, filet, Irish or Cluny, from two and a half to four inches wide makes a pretty border for this. This must, of course, be put on by hand. A handsome monogram in one corner gives the last touch of beauty to a cloth which has cost not much over $15, and which would demand three times that price in the shops.

But if something far less expensive is desired, excellent suggestions are given at the upholstery lace counters of the department shops. Here they will baste or pin together charming combinations of motifs of filet or eyelet work, joined and edged by lace. They make up far more effective designs than one would be apt to accomplish oneself. Tea cloths, centerpieces, table covers, lingerie pillow slips, sideboard covers and tray cloths are thus easily made. The smaller pieces in real filet with eyelet and lace may be bought for from $4.95 up. The cost of the material only is charged.

Still less expensive, extremely simple, and in excellent taste are pieces made of the linen that comes by the yard with squares of drawnwork set in. These squares are about six by six. Edged with real Cluny a half inch in width, that comes at 25 cents, and with a monogram to give the personal touch, these covers are charming. The material is one yard wide, just shading on the cream tone, and costs $3 a yard.

Lingerie pillows require a little more time, but are wonderfully dainty gifts. Three-quarters of a yard of handkerchief linen, 36 inches wide, will make a 17 by 13-inch pillow case. About two inches inside the edge, eyelets one inch wide and two inches apart are worked. Through these is run a satin ribbon to match the coloring of the pillow, and tied in a big bow on one corner. The whole is finished with a four-inch ruffle edged with double hemstitching. These are charming pillows for the lounge or chaise longue of the boudoir.

Cake covers to keep flies and insects away from the sandwiches and toast at out-of-doors afternoon tea are made of wire, are covered with imitation or real filet lace, are octagonal and high enough to clear the plate and its contents. At the middle of the top is a crochet button by which to lift it, and these are quite simple to make. The frame should be 10 inches across the top and four inches high. A flat piece of allover imitation filet lace is used for the top, and one long piece around the side. On the edges is sewed a half-inch lace insertion to hide the stitches.

THE ROSE of FASHION

Not Less Than Other Feminine Adornments is the Rose Subject to the Whim of Fashion

THE lovely Radiance rose was exploited as a novelty last season, and was brought into especial prominence at the dinner given by Mrs. Orme Wilson in honor of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught and the Princess Patricia during their visit to New York. From this occasion its popularity spread, until now florists find it almost impossible to supply the demand. In the opinion of dealers, the Radiance is outclassed in many respects by the older and more familiar varieties. They consider its present popularity unwarranted, and predict that the fad will wane as rapidly as it has waxed, because although the buds are exquisite in their deep pink coloring, they have no lasting power, but open wide in a short time and soon fall to pieces.

In color and fragrance the full-petaled Radiance resembles the Bounceline, although a much larger rose. Perhaps on account of the scarcity of its rival, the Bounceline is returning to favor just now. Its only drawback is its tendency to droop when out of water; hence its unsuitability for wearing on the corsage or carrying in bouquets. In fragrance, however, it is unsurpassed.

Another old-time favorite now much in request for the so-called "rose-trees" is the Safrano. Rose-trees are used to decorate the dinner tables. They are made of small buds bunched closely together in pyramidal form on a five-inch stem planted in a wistaria-wood basket.

COMMERCIAL REQUISITES OF THE ROSE

In the floral market, roses are advanced or held back, according to their physical qualifications—color, fragrance, strength of stem and powers of endurance—and many beautiful hothouse roses, which have gladdened us for a time, have passed into obscurity, or are now only obtainable in private collections, because they are lacking in some of these commercial points. This is quite true of the de Watteville, a most exquisite, variegated rose of ivory-white tipped with cerise, which has lost prestige; of the Meteor, a dark crimson rose now entirely replaced by the Richmond; of the Niphetos and the Bride, large white roses now seldom seen, and of the glorious Maréchale Neil.

The passing of the Maréchale Neil is a rose-tragedy to its many admirers, for not so many years ago it was regarded as the choicest bloom of the hothouse, and was greatly prized for its delicious fragrance. Some of the less conscientious dealers will sell the Cloth of Gold blooms under the name of Maréchale Neil, but one inquires in vain for them at the prominent florists. This rose is a climber by nature, and has a crooked stem which makes it awkward to arrange in vases; nevertheless its disappearance must always be a matter of regret.

ROSE FASHIONS

Fashions in roses are established in several ways. A rose that takes the prize at a competitive display of the rose-growers must have some quality to recommend it, for only pure merit wins. These prize roses are then grown from cuttings, and as soon as produced in sufficient quantity, become the rage. Last year, the rose now dignified by the name of Mrs. Taft was launched, and soon became established as a favorite. It is shell-pink in color, with loose petals of an unusual shape, pointed on the edge. It opens very wide like a wild rose, and the color of the full-blown rose is pinker than the buds, which have a yellow tinge.

Several of the hothouse roses, otherwise commercially desirable, have a tendency to lose color when fully opened. This is especially true of the pink Killarney and of the yellow

Mrs. Aaron Ward. In addition to the latter, all of the pinkish-yellow roses are fashionable, including the Irish Melody, the Sunrise, the Lady Hillington and the Sunset. The greatest novelty of this season has been the deep yellow Sunburst rose, but this is not yet produced in sufficient quantities for the market, and the stems are still too short.

THE PRE-EMINENT KILLARNEY

Beyond all question, the several varieties of the Killarney rose—the white, pale pink and deep pink, and the new reddish-pink Killarney Queen—are the blooms par excellence for all occasions, and are steadily in demand because of their extraordinary staying powers. They are remarkably strong of stem, and the buds retain their fine shape and uprightness for several days. For this reason alone, rose-growers have given the Killarney a preference which is almost a monopoly, causing them to supplant the pink Bridesmaid and the La France, the white Bride and Niphetos, for weddings and other functions. In fact, the white Killarney is practically the only white bud that is now available in large quantities in the metropolitan market.

Certain of the hothouse roses continue to reign undisputed, and of these the American Beauty is still queen, not only because of its durability, its rich fragrance and color, but also because of the wonderful way in which each bloom develops—each long, straight stem with handsome foliage supporting only a single bloom at its extremity. This makes it ideal for tall silver or crystal vases.

THE ROSE IN COMBINATION

Roses combine charmingly with other flowers. A fashionable combination is the deep crimson Richmond roses with white lilacs; the pink Killarneys, or the Radiance, with lilies-of-the-valley, and the Irish Melody with white or green orchids. The Radiance is also arranged sometimes with the Sunrise roses, as they show gradations of the same color and harmonize delightfully, and frequently it is used with freesias and Roman hyacinths during their brief season, although freesias are shown to the best advantage with tall mignonette stalks. The apricot-tinted varieties of roses combine exquisitely with violets, and a certain florist, knowing this, makes up for his show-windows dainty twig baskets containing pussy willows, Sunset roses and California violets.

The Greatest China Factory In The World

Not in England, or France, or Germany, but at Newell, West Virginia, U. S. A., is located the pottery of The Homer Laughlin China Co., the largest in the world. To make the 45,000,000 pieces of Homer Laughlin China, annually produced, requires the work of 1,800 people; 15 acres of floor space is necessary; and for decorating, $60,000 worth of gold alone is used annually. These figures indicate the popularity of Homer Laughlin China.

In addition to its beauty and refinement of design and decoration, Homer Laughlin China gives splendid service. It is "as good as it looks." In buying, see that the trade-mark name "Homer Laughlin" appears on the under side of each piece of sufficient size.

prevail in a republic. Nevertheless, as long as certain distinctions in rank are observed, some uniform rule must be followed, and that should be the one observed in older civilizations. These questions come up frequently in Washington, and sometimes are the cause of much embarrassment, and might even lead to unpleasant international episodes. Perhaps it would be well if we could import some enterprising person from Europe to give us a few lessons on knotty points. One year there was a young woman in New York who taught American women how to behave when presented at court—no easy matter, by the way.

THE SEASON LATE DECEASED

The late season in New York had some very pleasant incidents. Mr. and Mrs. Bradley Martin came over from England for a visit—the first in a number of years and, during their short stay, received much hospitality. There were the usual array of spring brides, and a most interesting announcement of an engagement—that of Miss Marjorie Ide, the daughter of our Minister to Spain and the younger sister of Mrs. Bourke-Cockran, to Shane Leslie, the son of Colonel and Mrs. Leslie and the grandson of Leonard Jerome.

The Americans will do the major part of the entertaining during the London season. At present, matters look rather stormy, and conditions are quite serious. In March, what with the coal strikes, the belligerent suffragettes and the bad weather, everybody was blue as indigo. Then Mrs. White-law Reid was compelled to be absent from the first two courts on account of her husband's illness. Mrs. William Phillips, the wife of the first Secretary, and formerly Miss Caroline Astor Drayton, was also ill. The third court saw the presentation of Miss Gretta Hostetter, whose mother later gave a dance for her at Sherry's, in this city.

The Liberals being in, there is added to the list of political hostesses, Lady Craven, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bradley Martin and the wife of the Captain of the Yeomen of the Guard. Lady Craven, like her mother, Mrs. Bradley Martin, is most hospitable. She gave her first reception at the house in Chesterfield Gardens, and in spite of the advent of a most inconsiderate, unbidden guest, a suffragette who forced an entrance and began crying out, "Votes for Women!" it was a great success.

Mrs. Mackay, not of the New York and California Mackays, is a London hostess from Chicago. There are two Anglo-American debutantes—Miss Smith-Barry, the daughter of Lord and Lady Barrymore, and Miss Chauncey, the daughter, by a previous marriage, of Mrs. Cecil Bingham. But due to the strikes and other civil troubles, the death of the Duke of Fife and of the venerable Duchess of Buccleuch, who was related to half the peerage in England, prospects for a gay London season were not, at first, brilliant. Now, however, there is hope of the sky clearing.

Now comes the question of the bed linens. Simple, conservative designs are always best. Among the moderately priced bedspreads is one of heavily embroidered linen, one corner of which is reproduced below the napkin. It can be bought in two sizes; 90 x 108 inches is priced at $65, and 72 x 108 inches is $55. Bolster rolls to match cost $10.75, measuring 36 x 60 inches, and $15 is charged for the 36 x 72-inch size.

Sheets and pillow cases of pure Irish linen with a single initial or monogram are exceedingly good-looking. The sheets, with hemstitching, range in price from $11.75 to $22 a pair; for a scalloped edge the price is slightly higher. Pillow cases to match cost from $3 to $6 each. The style of sheet and pillow case shown at the top of the page is unusually attractive. These are pure linen, hemstitched, with a scalloped edge combined with fleur-de-lis. The sheets are $22 a pair, and the pillow cases, $5.50 each. The fleur-de-lis design is carried out in the monogram, the embroidering of which costs 65 cents apiece on the sheets and 27 cents on the pillow cases.

DINING ROOM TABLE PAD

Even when one takes the precaution to use asbestos mats and heavy silence cloths to protect the polished surface of the dining room table, scratches and discolorations will still appear. A new table pad, similar in appearance to the asbestos-lined table pad, has recently been constructed on scientific principles; this practically assures protection from damage by either hot or cold dishes. First there is a layer of wool felt and asbestos, then, as asbestos is not water-proof, a covering of water-proof cloth. Most people do not realize that the harm done the table is the result rather of the steam produced by the hot dish than by the hot dish itself. Outside of the water-proof cloth is still another covering of cotton flannel. The edges are bound with strong tape, and the whole pad is wonderfully light.

These pads will be made to order to fit any size or shape table, or they may be had in the regulation sizes. Two semi-circular table ends, 48 or 54 inches in diameter, cost $5. A great improvement on the old hinges, which made uneven places under the cloth, are the invisible folds which permit the pad to be folded over and stored away in a side-board drawer. Single table leaves, 12 inches in diameter, may be bought for $1, and wider leaves are slightly higher in price. An excellent idea, when ordering more than two leaves, is to have two leaves made in one; the mat is easier to manage, and the separation of leaves under the cloth is avoided.

WELL-MADE TAFFETA PETTICOATS

An up-to-date manufacturer is making up all his new models in soft chiffon taffetas. These petticoats come in every possible shade, in both plain and changeable colors, with the green combination predominating. Price, $5. They are cut on straight lines, without a sign of fullness save for a deep accordion-plaited ruffle, which is protected by a scanty drop ruffle of the silk. Even the inconspicuous placket is fastened flatly by glove clasps. These skirts have two devices which insure a perfect fit without any alteration. Two pieces of elastic set in the waist-band render it capable of stretching from three to six inches, so as to fit snugly around the waist. The waist-bands come in three sizes—18 to 22, 22 to 28, and 28 to 34. A smooth fit over the hips is further insured by two V-shaped gussets of silk elastic mesh cloth, set one over each hip.
